Finance and Socialism.
The Indispensable Man.
No More Bow-Stringing.
A Good 1928—J. Simpson.

—By Arthur Brisbane

(Copyright, 1927, by Star Co.)

ABRAHAM CAHAN, returning from Russia, is pessimistic about Bolshevism. Mr. Cahan, a Socialist, highly educated and editor of a very "radical" newspaper, the "Daily Forward," says Russia's experiment won't work. "Eighty-five per cent. of Russians are peasants, and Socialism is possible only in a highly educated and industrialized state."

It isn't possible there, either, where men have decent wages, automobiles, radio apparatus, talking machines, food reasonably cheap, and a chance to own their homes. But that's another story.

Mr. Cahan calls Stalin "the Richard Croker of Russia" and Trotsky a mere baby beside him. Trotsky, according to Mr. Cahan, "is a blatherskite, who glories in hearing himself talk."

High financiers always speak most politely of each other. Radicals do not, and that is fortunate for high finance.

Newspapers announce resignations of three Henry Ford managers in service, sales and purchasing departments. When Joseph Pulitzer, a real editor, was ill in Paris, he got word that George Turner, one of a number of men supposed to have "made The World," threatened to leave. Pulitzer cabled back, "The indispensable man is not numerous. Let him go." That's probably how Ford feels.

Dr. Gates, head of the Constantinople Robert College, says Kemal Pasha gives Turkey the best government he has known during 46 years of educational work in Turkey.

Under Kemal Pasha, at least, there are no Sultans ordering big black eunuchs to strangle fickle wives and throw them in the Bosphorus. No more veils are on women's faces, and Turkey is ruled by living Turks, not by the ghost of Mohammed, the camel driver, or any caliph supposed to represent him. That's progress.

James Simpson, returning from England, predicts good business for 1928, and says the past Summer and Fall have been better than a year ago.

Mr. Simpson, head and chief of the gigantic Marshall Field retail and wholesale business and therefore in touch with business conditions all over the United States, says, "There is no inflation in business here."

Jack Dempsey, starting a law suit with his former manager, began taking notes in court. But his lawyer asked for the right to examine the jury, voir dire, and Dempsey, who had never been taught to use the French infinitive in that way, stopped note-taking.

Dempsey's lawyer accuses Dempsey's manager of holding out $500,000. All prize fight interests are trying to settle this lawsuit, fearing it may reveal, concerning "faked" fights and championships, truths calculated to discourage gentlemen that pay $40 a ringside seat.

Lord Derby has sold the freehold and ground rents of 22,000 houses in England's biggest real estate deal. He had previously sold millions of other real estate, and will sell more.

Single taxers look upon this as a sign favorable to their plans and hopes. The noble lord retains the "manorial rights" which his family has held ever since Richard III. was killed at the battle of Bosworth in 1485.

Single tax and socialism may seise his manorial rights later, but he doesn't intend that they shall take his millions or pounds' worth of old real estate property. He's a practical lord.

Mr. Thomas Lamont, one of J. Pierpont Morgan's able partners, denies that bankers cause war, says bankers aid peace, wars come from statesmen.

If bankers ever did cause wars, using their privately owned statesmen for the purpose, they probably won't cause any more wars intentionally. Bankers and others have discovered that even the winner loses in modern war.

Another great war would start with confiscation of private capital, including bankers' capital.

STRANGE 'TIE' BINDS FLIER TO HER RIVAL, SHE ASSERTS

Former Shenandoah Chief and "Other Woman" Forced Her to Spend Night With Them

CITES 3-YEAR OBLIGATION

Mrs. Klein Wins $300 Monthly Alimony; Says Husband Is Paid $25,000 a Year

New York, Nov. 19—Charges that former Commander Jacob Henry Klein of the United States Navy, once master of the ill-fated Shenandoah, is "financially obligated" to live for three years with a woman not his wife, were made by Mrs. Klein today.

In an affidavit, filed in connection with Mrs. Klein's suit for a separation, it is alleged that she learned of this obligation after he refused to live with her.

RIVAL NAMELESS.

He is now fulfilling this pact, the affidavit continues, in a luxurious apartment at 39 Fifth avenue and at the same time is a $25,000 a year executive for a Broad street brokerage house.

In no place in the affidavit is the "other woman" named, although Mrs. Klein tells of invading her husband's apartment and finding her there.

She says she remained at the apartment that day and was persuaded to stay over night.

Comdr. Klein

This romance triangle was revealed today before Supreme Court Justice Valente when Mrs. Klein was awarded $300 a month temporary alimony as the affidavit was filed.

Later Klein said the suit had been settled out of court and would not come up for trial. Terms of settlement were not revealed.

MET BY A FRIEND.

Mrs. Klein, whose full name is Mrs. Gladys James Klein, states she was in Europe with their son in the Winter of 1926-27. Her husband at that time was, she says, executive officer at the naval air station at Lakehurst, N. J.

She was informed while abroad, the affidavit continues, that her husband had returned from the navy. She returned immediately, but he did not meet her at the dock. Instead she was met by a friend of his who, she says, told her her husband was "out of town" and would communicate with her "in a couple of days."

She went, she said, to the Hotel Webster, and there, a day or so later, she was visited by her husband. He told her, the affidavit asserts, that he no longer intended to make a home for her and that she, his wife, would have to leave New York. Later, she says, she learned of the alleged obligation.

She left New York the affidavit adds, going to Annapolis, where she lived with friends until last June.

The surprise visit to the Fifth Avenue apartment was made in

FLIERS BATTLE DEATH IN STORM

Records Prove Mexican Plot

Documents From Archives Show President Calles Financed Anti-United States Revolution in Nicaragua

By JOHN PAGE

Copyright, 1927, by Washington Herald.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.

AMAZING revelations supported by documentary proof have been published by the Hearst newspapers during the past week showing the anti-American and pro-Bolshevist activities of President Calles and the Government of Mexico.

These revelations confirm at every point the charges made by President Coolidge and Secretary of State Kellogg during the height of the Sacasa "Liberal" revolution in Nicaragua that Mexico was in reality responsible for the attempt to overthrow the Nicaraguan Government, and go much further.

Secret official documents taken from the files of the Mexican Government, show:

Bolshevist Agents Financed

That, after the landing of American marines in Nicaragua, Mexico contributed a million dollars in one lump sum to the rebel cause, though the United States was opposing the rebellion.

That when the captain of a Mexican steamship refused to take arms to the Nicaragnan rebels in defiance of the United States, Calles caused the arrest of the captain, who subsequently disappeared.

That various smaller sums were furnished to the Mexican Ambassador in Guatemala for the specific purpose of inspiring anti-American newspaper propaganda.

That President Calles sent Bolshevist agents into Guatemala to convert the Guatemalan Indians to Communism, and supplied the agents liberally with funds for the purpose.

That the Mexican executive ordered and paid for the printing of Communist text-books for Mexican school children and employed a Communist propagandist to supervise the job.

That Calles had contact with the Russian Communists before the Nicaraguan revolution, having ordered a payment of $100,000 to the Mexican Minister in Russia, to be delivered to an agent of the Bolsheviks "for our propaganda."

The revelations published by the Hearst newspapers have shown that our Chief Executive knew what he was talking about when, on January 11, 1927, he explained very clearly and convincingly the causes which had forced the United States to take a hand in the events then transpiring in Nicaragua.

President Coolidge then stated that under the terms of the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty, negotiated between the United States and Nicaragua in 1916, the American Government had acquired certain rights, among them that of constructing an inter-oceanic canal across Nicaraguan territory, and had accepted certain obligations.

Fomenting Nicaraguan Revolution

He asserted that the Government of Mexico had fomented revolutions in Nicaragua for the purpose of deposing the rightfully elected President of that country and installing in his place an executive less friendly to the United States. He showed that in sending American marines into Nicaragua the United States was doing nothing more than fulfilling its treaty obligations with that friendly country and upholding the Monroe Doctrine against the secret attacks of the Mexican Government.

The President's very reasonable and moderately phrased statement nevertheless met with a barrage of criticism from members of the Senate and House of Representatives—the quarters where he had a right to look first for support of his foreign policy.

The American Government's position was thereupon restated by Secretary of State Kellogg on January 13, two days later. This statement showed in further detail the extent to which Mexico had fomented revolutions in Nicaragua, and pointed out the close relationship existing between the Bolshevism rampant in Russia and the Bolshevist principles, policies and activities of the Mexican Government.

This perfectly sound statement of existing conditions was derided by opponents of the Coolidge Administration, and by those ill-balanced statesmen who think the United States must necessarily be wrong in its disputes with foreign countries.

Unfortunately, Secretary Kellogg, while he set forth facts, and nothing but facts, at that time had not the complete documentary evidence to establish those facts.

Fortunately the Hearst papers now have the documentation necessary to establish the complete proof of Secretary Kellogg's

GRAPHIC STORY OF NIGHTMARE OF SKIES TOLD

British Non-Stop Airmen Dodged Mountain Peaks in Sleet-Laden Gales

CRASHED IN POLAND

Capt. MacIntosh and Hinkler Flew Blind; Both Escaped Injury

By H. K. REYNOLDS
International News Correspondent.

London, Nov. 19.—The story of how two lone men, aloft in an airplane, played hide-and-seek with death was related by cable tonight by Capt. Robert H. MacIntosh and Bert Hinkler, British airmen.

They attempted a non-stop flight from London to Karachi, India, and failed.

The airmen's story was cabled to the Sunday Graphic from Lemberg, Poland, near where they were forced down out of control.

"Safe but worn out by our terrible nightmare."

This was the message from the airmen which advised an anxious London of their safety.

MacIntosh and Hinkler hopped off Wednesday in an attempt to break the long-distance record held by Clarence Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine.

FLIERS ESCAPE DEATH.

Their plane, Princess Xenia, crashed in Eastern Galicia, near Lemberg, after having flown 2,300 miles. Neither man was injured; the plane was damaged.

"Soon after taking off the weather thickened, and we lost sight of the ground," the airmen said in their cable to the Sunday Graphic.

"Throughout Wednesday we flew through pitch blackness. We were unable to sight the ground. We encountered terrific snow storms all the way and incessant, terrifying air-bumps.

LOSE CONTROL OF PLANE.

"Once we lost all control and did not regain it until only a few hundred feet off the ground.

"The whole journey was one of blind flying. We found ourselves flying among mountain peaks which were invisible through the storm. We spent many terrifying hours dodging this way or that to avoid a peak which would loom up out of the gloom."

When the dawn finally came, the airmen said, it brought dense fog, which finally forced the plane down.

MISS WILSON AND BARTHELMESS PART

New York, Nov. 19.—Katherine Wilson, actress, has broken her engagement to Richard Barthelmess, motion picture star. He insisted on her choosing between his career and a stage career and she has chosen the career.

This was learned tonight from Miss Wilson herself.

LONDON CRIMSON MEN GET DETAIL OF PLAY

London, Nov. 19 (I.N.S.)—Thirty-five Harvard men sat round a Crimson draped dinner-table at Claridge's tonight and heard a play-by-play description of the Harvard-Yale game.

Members of the Harvard Club of London maintained an open wire on the transatlantic telephone for receiving their report.

MRS. NICHOLS MAY QUIT HOSPITAL SOON

The complication of a mild attack of diphtheria will not be a serious setback to the rapid convalescence of Mrs. Malcolm E. Nichols, wife of the Mayor, said physicians yesterday. It is expected she will be able to leave Thorndike Memorial House, City Hospital, for home within two weeks.

"Democratic Party Can Be Revived and Made Dominant"

To the Editor of the New York American:

YOU said in your editorial the day after election that "Democracy is all right when wisely led."

Undoubtedly that is so and wise leadership consists in submitting to the electorate issues expressing the principles and policies of genuine democracy, of faithful interest in the public welfare.

The Democratic party was wisely led under Jefferson, who founded the party, and devoted it to "the greatest good of the greatest number"; that is, to the service of the whole people and not to the particular advantage of any clique or class.

Jefferson believed that public officials were the servants of the public and that they should be kept constantly mindful of that fact and constantly under public control BY SHORT TERMS IN OFFICE and frequent opportunities on the part of the public to endorse them or reject them at the polls.

Democracy was well led under Madison, who followed closely in the footsteps of Jefferson.

Democracy was well led under Monroe, who upheld the principles of Jefferson and added the important policy which established the freedom of the American continents, North and South, from European aggression.

Democracy was well led under Jackson, who labored patriotically in the public interest always and who fought and defeated the great power of oppressive monopoly of his day, protecting the public from the financial despotism and political dominance of the United States Bank.

Democracy was wisely led under Van Buren, and it was to deprive him of deserved renomination that the undemocratic rule requiring a two-thirds vote in order to nominate, became the law of Democratic conventions.

Democracy was well led under Polk, who added the great Southwest to the areas of this country and Democrats should remember with pride that more than half of the extent of these United States was added by patriotic Democratic Presidents, anxious to make their country powerful and their people prosperous.

Democracy was well led under Tilden, who fought corruption in politics in both the Democratic and Republican parties and who declared that the Democratic party would always win when it had the courage to be democratic.

Tilden was a great Democrat and would have been a great President, but he was counted out by the political corruption which he had heroically fought in the public interest.

Democracy was wisely led by Cleveland, a sterling Democrat who followed the policies of Jefferson and upheld and enforced the doctrine of Monroe, commanding England to keep her hands off the South American republics.

Democracy was well led until the fantastic fancies, the vagaries and vanities of one unsound and erratic individual were substituted for the proven policies of all the great Democratic leaders of our nation's history.

Under Wilson and the weak men who came after him, the Democratic party became a party of visionary internationalism, sacrificing the welfare of our own people for the interests of foreign peoples who were alike unworthy and ungrateful.

Under unwise, undemocratic leadership, the Democratic party has gone down to defeat and almost to extinction. It can be revived again and made the dominant party of the nation under sound Democratic leadership following the policies of Jefferson and all the great Democrats of the past, protecting the public from exploitation by powerful interests, destroying political corruption, increasing the greatness of our nation and enlarging the opportunities of our people and, above all, keeping free from foreign entangling alliances and devoting attention primarily to the welfare of the people of the United States.

The Democratic party won in the recent New York elections on Democratic issues, promising to give the people their own transportation and to run the government in the public interests.

It can win as easily, nationally, on truly democratic issues.

Remember the inspiring words of Tilden:

"The Democratic party can ALWAYS win when it has the courage to be democratic."

FLYING DIVE E... GARVEY PUSH... BALL OVER F... FIRST SCORE

FRENCH IS CRIMSON STAR

Roxbury Boy and Bill H... mersly Reel Off Runs of 52 and 42 Yards

By DAMON RUNYON
Universal Service Correspondent.

Those left halfback shoes that were left at Yale by Bruce Caldwell, were filled without a squeak by Johnny Garvey and Bill Hammersly, in turn, yesterday afternoon.

In fact, if Johnny Garvey had had a bunion on either hoof, the shoes might have pained him, so tightly did his football feet fill them.

I speak in strange metaphor... pa, but I mean to convey that Johnny Garvey and Bill Hammersly were plenty of football against Dair Harvard on Soldiers' Field yesterday, each in the position in which Caldwell was the early season for Yale before he was found ineligible.

Poor Harvard was little more than a football "push over" for the men from New Haven, as the score of 14 to 0 will show.

Blessed, they say, is he who expects nothing for he shall not be disappointed.

In that case Harvard cannot take the case much to heart, for Arnold Horween scarcely expected anything less than defeat. As a matter of fact there are some Harvardians who feared the score might be of a more moral victory. They expected much worse.

SPRINTS TO TOUCHDOWN.

In the course of the afternoon... and a chilly afternoon it was, at that—Johnny Garvey, got away on a 52-yard sprint for a touchdown, while Bill Hammersly, pecking Johnny in Caldwell's old job a little later, galloped 42 yards to another score.

Bill finished all alone, but Johnny got there just as eye-winker ahead of an eager clutch from Joe Pot... a fingernail.

John's dash was perhaps more spectacular than that of Bill's, but they both produced the same result.

In three plays leading up to the first touchdown, Yale gained 15 yards. Garvey going seven in a sort of preliminary gallop, Cox 33, then Garvey 52.

TAKES FLYING DIVE.

He swept past the scattered Crimson tacklers like they were standing still. Bruce Caldwell as famous Yale gains making nary a rattle on his flying feet.

He carried his body rigid against attack as he ran. Garvey stands 5 feet 11 and packs 178 pounds, but runs. He comes from Roxbury and he is plenty Irish. Only young Porter thundered at his heels as he tore down upon the Harvard goal.

Perhaps Johnny felt Joe's hot breath against the back of his neck, for he suddenly took a flying dive at the line and went over with Porter smacking at him.

55,000 SHIVER.

The 55,000 men, women and small children shivering in the Stadium, took this incident with varying emotions. There was a blast of whoops from the Yale side of the field and silence on the Harvard side until a young Crimson cheer leader piped up his megaphone, and said, philosophically:

"A long cheer for the team!"

They gave it, all right, but there is never much real heart in cheers at such moments.

Therefore, however, Yale got what you might call a traditional battle for the rest of the half. Harvard and Yale may have the worst teams in the world, but they always fight each other to a finish in their big game.

Not until the second half was Yale able to score again and that was when young Bill Hammersly, sleeker and shadowy, broke away from a tangle of players to the

Cafes, Clubs, Theatres All Echo Eli's Song of Victory

SYMPHONY OF BULLDOG BLUE FOR YALE TEAM

Every Available Policeman on Duty to Keep Traffic Moving

HOLIDAY SPIRIT IN AIR

Intercollegiate Ball Draws Great Crowd of Merry Dancers

The voice of the city sang a song of the blue last night.

In the streets where the blue vapor of motor exhausts made rank the air; in cafes and clubs where china rattled and silver tinkled rapidly above the hum of excited conversation; in the ballrooms and on countless dance floors where golden-slippered feet swished . . . rhythm a-lilting, dimelled music—Yale celebrated Eli's victory, or at least the celebrants wore the azure blue primly.

Although every available extra policeman was detailed on traffic duty, the jam of motors in the downtown section was, at times, comparable with the congestions experienced on a Saturday that falls immediately before a Christmas.

THEATRES CROWDED.

In the theatres every seat was taken, every inch of standing room was occupied by feet—4-ft's, with long 11's accompanying—and from once in this early season the drama, as regards "out front," was surfeited with customers.

But it was a Yale crowd almost entirely, whether or not the celebrants were cohorts or drifters-with-the-tide.

The blue feathers of Eli were everywhere, in the derby toppers crowning fur-coated gallants on the street, with pins on the outer overplus of pretty girls accompanying —and in the buttonholes and on the evening gowns of the girls within doors.

The Crimson feathers of Harvard adherents were barely noticeable in the milling throngs.

DANCING AT THE STATLER.

Speculators in theatre tickets, apparently well equipped with illegal and illicit pasteboards, reaped a harvest as late comers endeavored to gain entrance and seats for the various performances, and after curtain time came everything had been sold beyond luring of cash.

One of the biggest throngs of the night was at the Hotel Statler where the intercollegiate ball was under way. Dancing on the dance floor was a problem for a time, so great was the gathering.

The same held true at the Copley-Plaza Hotel where a special football night program was in order of the night.

Other hotels experienced similar crowded conditions, but the throngs took the congestion in good spirit and devised all efforts to enjoyment despite the jam.

Atop the thronged Ritz-Carlton, the beauty green beacon light that winks its eye nightly across town, blinked a signalling blue last night, telling of the Yale victory clinched previously at the tea hour.

The Plymouth Theatre was sold out to an entirely Yale crowd and the Majestic Theatre housed adherents to the do-rated Crimson solely.

YALE BOYS DRIVE DOBBIN.

Perhaps the outstanding feature of the traffic jam in the streets was the periodical progress through the Tremont, Boylston, Stuart and Washington street sections of an old-time open barouche, drawn by a unanimously blue horse and occupied by four Eli adherents—two rich-room-coated youths and two pretty girls.

Swing after swing was made by the slow-rolling barouche through Tremont street to Boylston to Park square, to Stuart, to Washington, West and to Tremont streets, while excited behind crowds on second speed and the drivers gave mention to applicable words.

With each approach of the slow-riding four, the traffic officers groaned, but there was nothing to do but wave the vehicle on—and the horses plodded, while the four occupants sat complacently, ignoring the jibes of those on the sidewalks.

Many out of town automobiles were in the traffic streams, most of the foreign cars carrying New York and Connecticut number plates, but there were cars sighted from as far away as Colorado.

It was Yale's night and the voice of the city sang a song of the blue.

Victorious Yale Team Attends Show

The victorious Yale team, after being feted and dined at the University Club, their headquarters in Boston, broke training by attending the performance of "Broadway" at the Plymouth Theatre.

At the same time the defeated Harvard players were the guests of the Harvard Athletic Association at a dinner dance at the Parker House.

COBHAM IS FORCED BACK BY WEATHER

Southampton, Eng., Nov. 19 (I.N.S.)—Sir Alan Cobham, noted English aviator, who plans a 20,000 mile flight around Africa, hopped off today on the second leg of the journey, but was compelled by bad weather conditions to return after being in the air 10 minutes.

In addition to Sir Alan and Lady Cobham four others are making the flight in the giant flying boat.

'Flying Governor' and Family See Game

EX-NAVY OFFICER IN 'LOVE BONDAGE'

February. That part of the affidavit which tells of it follows:

"I visited him unannounced at 3:30 o'clock in the morning of the second Sunday of February last and found him in the company of the other woman.

"The woman answered the door, scantily clad, and attempted to prevent me from entering, but I forced my way in and found him also scantily clad in the bedroom. He and the woman refused to allow me to depart that day and forced me to remain overnight."

While in the navy, according to the affidavit, the commander received $10,000 a year in salary and allowances from the government and now receives $25,000 a year as manager of the security and bond department of Dalzell, Ludwig & Company of 28 Broad street.

Mrs. Klein is represented by the law firm of Boyd, Adams, Chapman & Vreeland. Prince & Loeb represent the husband.

Commander Klein, who was nominated for Annapolis from Cincinnati by representative Nicholas Longworth, was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1907 and was assigned to the Rhode Island, on which he went around the world.

During the war, he was in command of destroyers operating off Queenstown and Brest.

SALVAGED SHENANDOAH.

The destroyer Smyth under his command made the most distinguished record of all ships of that type, fighting submarines and saving lives from torpedoed vessels. It was the rescue ship for both the ill-fated President Lincoln and the Finland.

After the war Klein went into the naval air service and became the first executive officer of the ZRC-1, the Shenandoah; and, a year later, was made commandant of the Lakehurst air station. In 1924 he was assigned, with three American officers, to bring back the Leo Arcadia.

He became the ship's commander and, one day, sailed it a mile up into the sky with a group of scientists, eager to make solar observations.

Over the Shenandoah disaster, he was appointed head of the board of inquiry, and also directed the salvaging of the wrecked ship.

Man Dies at Work

Stricken suddenly, William J. Crowdis, sixty, of No. 15 Elliston street, Dorchester, was taken from the plant of the Whiting Milk Company in Wyoma place to City Hospital yesterday and was pronounced dead on arrival.

ALL you holders of automobile registration plates numbered under 10,000 attention!

Next Friday Registrar of Motor Vehicles Frank A. Goodwin and his staff will begin the mailing out of plates for 1928 to holders of numbers under 10,000.

Other reserved numbers, up to 100,000, will be sent out as soon as possible afterwards. The new plates are white numerals and letters on a green background. The plates also bear for the first time in history a white replica of a small cod, the sacred cod of Massachusetts.

SOCIETY GOES TO GAME IN BOATS

Boston society folk proved themselves pioneers in one avenue they chose to reach the Harvard stadium yesterday, said avenue being the uncrowded, roomy Charles River. A whole flotilla of launches was pressed into service.

Never before has this method of reaching the arena of the Blue-Crimson struggle been chosen. Each boat carried from 25 to 40 persons and the charge for each craft averaged between $20 and $30.

Many of the fleet left from the Union Boat Club, Beacon, for the greater part, being private launches in charge of Capt. A. H. Young.

E. H. Brewer entertained a group of 25 at lunch at the Hotel Sheraton, and then to the surprise of his guest, Mr. Brewer piloted them to the Massachusetts avenue public landing where they boarded the launch and in a short time were in their seats in the stadium.

Kari Adams, former president of the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad, escorted his party of 20 in his private launch.

Ruth Carro Eiseman of Beacon street entertained 40 at luncheon at her home, and then boarded a launch

Dr. and Mrs. E. Streeter of Beacon and Exeter streets played host to 40 guests on board the launch Gay Head, while the Radcliffe, a regular basin excursion launch, carried nearly 50 football lovers.

Yards of Pockets

Paris, Nov. 19.

NOT only will woman have ordinary pockets on her coat, but itty-bitty yards of them on her skirt. The latest notion to make the short skirt "look different" is to adorn it with pockets that reach from the waist to the hem.

MISS TRUMBULL IN FAMILY PARTY

Florence Trumbull, the attractive daughter of the Governor of Connecticut, who has danced with the President's son, was in Boston for the big game. John Coolidge, however, being a loyal son of umberia, spent the week-end studying.

Miss Trumbull drove up from Connecticut with her father and mother, her sister Jean and a girl friend, Laurine Rolfe, in a car piloted by a Connecticut state trooper. The party is stopping for the week-end at the Statler.

John Coolidge was called by telephone to ask if he intended to attend the annual gridiron battle between New England's two greatest colleges.

"I'm sticking to my studies and spending the week-end right here in Amherst," was his reply.

AIRPORT ISOLATED BY BROKEN CABLE

The Boston Airport, which first linked devastated Vermont with the outside world, got a taste of isolation itself yesterday when all telephone lines and the fire alarm signal system were put out of commission.

Workmen installing wires in one of the army hangars, accidentally drove a pick into the cable. Linemen had to string an emergency line from the corner of Jeffries street, a half-mile away.

DEPEW PREDICTS CALL FOR COOLIDGE

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Chauncey M. Depew today predicted a jam on candidates at the 1928 Republican convention that will end only with the renomination of President Coolidge.

He prophesied the convention would go into recess until the President should have fully considered what would amount to a unanimous call for him to run again.

2 CITIES IRON OUT TRAFFIC TO BIG GAME

Boston and Cambridge Police Co-operate to Keep Autos Running Smoothly

The traffic forces of two cities, augmented by hundreds of extra men, co-operated yesterday to make it possible for the never-ending river of automobiles to make its way through Boston and Cambridge to the Stadium whither the Harvard-Yale game called.

In other years there has been confusion because the motorists travelled first through Boston, then through Cambridge, and once more into Boston before reaching parking places near the Stadium, but this year this trouble was obviated by complete liaison between the Boston and Cambridge traffic men.

Deputy Superintendent Thomas F. Goode, in charge of traffic, assisted by Captains Hoppe and Laffey, called 300 extr men to traffic duty for the big day.

JAMAICAWAY PREFERRED.

Commonwealth avenue, one of the main arteries to the game, had traffic men at every cross street, and St. Mary's street bridge was opened to two-way travel because of the closing of the Cottage Farm bridge.

In the heart of the city extra men were on duty, not only keeping everything moving, but aiding strangers to find the best avenues to the Stadium.

Early in the day, Deputy Goode sent out his advice to motorists to go to the game by way of Jamaicaway, then following Harvard street to Allston to avoid the in-town congestion.

More traffic officers were stationed along Cambridge street, West End, while Supt. Albert Chapman of the Charles River division of the Metropolitan District Commission had his men posted along both sides of the Charles.

STREET ROPED OFF.

In Cambridge Chief of Police John A. McBride put new traffic regulations into force and called to service every man in the department excepting those on sick list.

At noon Boylston street was roped off and none save pedestrians was permitted to traverse this street. All traffic moving Boston-ward was directed through Broadway and Harvard square.

At the same hour Massachusetts avenue was in the grip of traffic arteries until after the hour for the calling of the game.

No private car was allowed on the college side of Massachusetts avenue until after the game, and only automobiles engaged in actual business were permitted to park on the other side of the street.

BALCHEN OPERATED ON FOR BOXING HURT

New York, Nov. 19.—Suffering from an injury to his back sustained during a boxing match last week, Bernt Balchen, famous aviator, was operated on today in Hackensack Hospital. Another operation may be necessary in a day or two, it is said.

Balchen was struck a sharp blow over the kidney. He was forced to cancel a flight to Havana, which he was to have made in a few days to deliver a Fokker monoplane to the Cuban government.

FOOTBALL SPECTATOR SUES FOR INJURY

Worcester, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Claiming his head was cut and that he was otherwise seriously injured by a bottle thrown by Peter E. Walsh of Brighton '28 (no Harvard-Holy Cross football game at Cambridge, Oct. 15, Harry Bromage of Worcester has started a $15,000 suit in the superior court against Walsh.

The plaintiff claims that, while seated in the lower part of the wooden stands, he was struck by a bottle thrown from a point near the top of the stadium where the defendant was seated.

COLLEGE HOSTS INVADE HUB IN PACKED TRAINS

Army of Eli and Harvard Fans Pour Through All Stations

Eli's blue hosts poured into Boston via the South and Back Bay stations yesterday to witness the forty-ninth annual clash with Harvard at the Stadium.

The invading army of football enthusiasts, equipped with banners and robes in anticipation of a crisp day on the sidelines, and carrying pennants and armbands, identifying their sentiment presented a holiday picture.

Both neckties and floral tokens of the proper hue to signify to which camp the wearer's allegiance was pledged, gave color to the carnival atmosphere of the hordes which filled the city during the forenoon.

MANY SPECIAL TRAINS.

Railroad officials estimated that the big pre-Thanksgiving sporting battle gave a greater stimulus to traffic than any intercollegiate game of the last few years, particularly on the New Haven road.

The crowds from Eli's camp began to close in on Boston Friday, when extra trains, run over the Shore Line, brought the advance guard of Yale rooters.

Some of these trains were operated as express-Pullmans from Grand Central Terminal to the Back Bay and South Stations. There was an extra train from Hartford to Boston yesterday as well as two specials from New Haven.

YALE SPECIAL HAS 23S.

The biggest train of the day, the "Yale Club Special," left New York city at 7:10 and arrived in Boston about 12:10 p. m. yesterday. It had a passenger census of 275. The extra trains averaged about ten cars each.

Quite a number of the football fans determined at the Back Bay Station and went to Cambridge by automobiles.

In addition to the Merchants' Limited, the New Haven Rail-oad has provided for extra sections today to transport the rooters back to Hartford, New Haven and other points today.

These extra trains, which will be routed by way of the Shore Line, will be Pullman cars.

WILSON TRICKED AT PARIS, SAYS MAURER

James H. Maurer of Pennsylvania, in an address on "The American Failure?" at the Twentieth Century Club yesterday, declared it his opinion that democracy has not yet been fully tried in the United States.

The speaker also said President Wilson should not have gone to the peace conference as a "political boss" he was a great man but not a statesman and knew nothing about the diplomatic problems. "He was great because he was not a statesman," said he.

NABS HUB SOLDIER IN FLEEING AUTO

After a chase of more than a half-mile, during which he fired two shots, Motorcycle Officer James F. Quinn of Cambridge last night arrested William J. Richards, 54, a soldier stationed at Fort Warren, on a charge of attempting to steal an auto.

Quinn saw three men get into a car he knew belonged to an accumulation on Hanover. He gave chase and at Mt. Auburn street, near Sparks street, the machine was stopped and two men jumped out and made their escape across a field.

MACHINE GUNMEN SHOOT 2 IN BRONX

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Machine gun gangsters wounded two and shot through the fusillade of shots fired from a closed car as it sped through Townsend avenue, in the Bronx.

Nathan Brooks, 30, of Philadelphia, walking with his wife, was struck in the right thigh.

LADY CATHCART DYING, EARL DEAD

By Universal Service.

London, Nov. 19. — While Vera, the Countess of Cathcart, who created a stir by being the cause of raising the issue of "moral turpitude" when she went to America two years ago, is lying dangerously ill of heart disease, her former husband, Earl Cathcart, died following an operation in a London hospital tonight.

Lady Vera suffered a relapse on hearing the news, and fears are now felt for her life.

The earl, who was 65, is succeeded to the title by his eight-year-old son, Lord Greenock.

CONSUMER URGES LOWER GAS RATE

The State Department of Public Utilities yesterday received another protest against the proposed new rates asked by the Boston Consolidated Gas Company.

Oscar Riemer, 129 G street, South Boston, wrote:

"As I understand it, 90 per cent of the customers are to be penalized because they use less than 2,500 cubic feet per month. Instead of penalizing the small consumer, and increasing his already large burden, let the gas company reduce their price to a level where it will be an inducement to use more."

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 19 (I.N.S.).—Master Photo Finishers of America concluded their five-day convention here with the election of officers, as follows:

The trip was made in an airplane.

KILLED GOING TO TRIAL AS BOOTLEG

Mahone, N. Y. Nov. 19 (I.N.S.).—While on his way from Amsterdam to answer bootlegging charges in the Federal court, Joseph Bluevive, 21, was fatally injured in an automobile smashup today. He died shortly afterward.

Walter Kroup, another occupant of the car, sustained a fractured skull, and the American Chamber of Commerce and the American Club.

HARDWICK PAYS GREAT TRIBUTE TO HAUGHTON

On Bended Knee, Offers Silent Prayer at Newly-Unveiled Memorial

Three hours yet were to lapse yesterday before eleven men in blue and eleven men in crimson emerged into action in the horseshoe, but a glance beyond.

The prayers had been offered, the speeches made, the eulogies delivered and the plaudits registered.

Subsided were the approbations, and the crowd had gone.

Excepting for a lone, lean, tow-headed figure, bowed in grief and unmindful of the costly hat, winding and twisting in nervous hands before the bas-reliefs of Percy Haughton, former Harvard football coach, just unveiled.

Mournful and eerie, the chill breeze whistled into the Stadium from the northwest and, sweeping on, whipped through the already wind-bitten grass, sere and yellow.

IN SILENT PRAYER.

The lone figure dropped quickly to one knee, bowed the tow head in silent prayer—and then "Tad" Hardwick, gaining his feet, walked rapidly away from the new memorial of his friend and counselor—but he walked far across Soldiers Field, away from the fellows at the unveiling and disappeared behind the concrete of the horseshoe.

Few witnessed the gesture of reverence and grief on the part of the great Harvard end whom Haughton ten or more years ago, designated as the All-American end for all time; a football player developed by Haughton and Haughton alone.

But it was the most pathetic touch in a memorial service that had many.

BAS-RELIEFS UNVEILED.

The two bas-reliefs, showing the famous coach, both as player and teacher on the gridiron, were unveiled in the presence of many former Harvard football stars and members of the athletic council and board of overseers including Bob Fisher, himself a former Harvard coach; Mal Logan, ex-quarterback; Ernie Bowes, former center; Bill Bingham, graduate manager of athletics; Langdon P. Marvin, president of the board of overseers; Edward Adams, treasurer of the Harvard Corporation.

Members of the Haughton family stood with Bishop William Lawrence, who later delivered an eulogy.

TRIBUTE RECOGNIZED.

The memorial services were opened with prayer by Rev. Sherrard Billings, pastor, a teacher of Mrs. Haughton. The minister was introduced by J. Wells Farley, chairman of the Harvard memorial committee.

Dean LeBaron Briggs delivered the principal eulogy, and he spoke of "P. D." as a man who was not only a football player and a coach, but as one who personified athletics in its higher ideals.

"We Must Educate the Emotions," Says Dr. Payson Smith

FEELINGS, NOT JUDGMENT RULE US, HE ASSERTS

Breaking Down of the Old Guides, With No New Ones Yet, Given as Reason

SOLUTION NOT YET FOUND

Church, Home and Professional Educators Factors in New Regime

By DR. PAYSON SMITH
Commissioner of Education of Massachusetts.

In an Interview with Sidney Douglas

EDUCATING the emotions is one of the most important things to be done in our country today.

Most people decide even the most serious matters on feeling rather than cold judgment. It's a great temptation to do that in our hurrying age.

They make up their minds, and speak and act, often, without real knowledge or consideration.

They are constantly assailed from all sides by propaganda, argument, discussion, some aimed directly at them and some simply at loud that they can't help hearing it; some with a sound basis of truth and some deliberately colored to serve one or another purpose. It is no wonder they become confused.

There is nothing to be alarmed about. On the whole, it is surprising we do so well, make so few mistakes, when there are chances for so many; and "we" means both the rising generation and its elders.

But training our emotions, so that we shall have them under such control that we think more quietly before we decide, count ten before we act, will save a lot of waste and wretchedness and other grave consequences.

It is not so easy as it used to be to decide wisely. Life is much more complex today than it was ten years ago. During the last twenty years our modern civilization has gained many of its most commonly used agencies and each has brought with it a new set of problems of its own or has injected new factors into old problems.

Confusion Rules

In its youth the older generation of the present found the telephone and electric light still rare luxuries. It saw the coming of the first trolley car and the first automobile. It was grown up when the motion picture, airship and radio appeared. It had a chance to adjust itself to them one at a time.

Youth today finds all these things waiting for it and faces the maze of problems they present all at once. What is good and what is bad? Which right and which wrong? How far may the individual go in self-expression without encroaching unfairly on others?

It is not simple for anyone to decide. It is still harder because many of the old signposts which used to guide human conduct have gone. They were tumbled down in the rush for the "new freedom" and no others have been set up as yet to take their places. There lies the strongest reason for educating the emotions.

It was inevitable that the new freedom, running to extremes, should affect authority in the home.

There have been some ghastly mistakes come out of this slackening of family ties and control; there have been things which shocked and hurt. But, again, it is surprising that there is so little of that sort of thing, comparatively. And youth has been the first to show signs of a revulsion against excesses.

The "Natural" Excuse

The influence of religion undoubtedly is less than it was a generation ago. Ask a boy whether he thinks his actions will land him in heaven or hell and he will laugh at you. His friends are likely to tell you that if he wants to go to hell that's his own business; for the half-baked philosophy and psychology which have taken the place of religion in the thoughts of certain of our young people have no regard for the rights or feelings of anyone but the individual.

They lay down the principle that whatever is "natural" cannot be sinful, which obviously leads in the direction of the moral breakdown the alarmists point to.

The rising generation's children will not be allowed to grow up in such a fashion; the rising generation, looking back on its own experiences, will see to that. And the first step towards betterment will be education of the emotions, for we have got to realize that everything in nature and in life is controlled by inexorable laws, which are unescapable.

But how is the training to be done?

That still has to be worked so far as systematic education goes. Obviously, the home must do a large share, and if the old-fashioned methods are inadequate to meet the more complex civilization of these days they must be adjusted and enlarged. The church must regain its hold, precept and example there and in the family life are the strong influences of the formative years.

One thing professional educators can do is use more discretion in what they offer the minds of their pupils and in the degree of liberty allowed as necessary to the development of the building individual's self.

Most minds will hold but one idea at a time, will follow but a train of thought at a time.

Fill them with the right things and there is no room left for the other kind.

2 IN AUTO HURLED 50 FEET BY TRAIN

George J. Farley, 63, and his grandson, George Farley, 13, of No. 247 Winthrop avenue, Revere, narrowly escaped death last night when the auto in which they were riding was struck by a Boston-bound B. & M. train at a crossing at Oak Island, Revere.

The two were treated at the Chelsea Memorial Hospital, the former for lacerations of the scalp and multiple contusions and abrasions of the body. The boy received a fractured left hand.

The machine and the passengers were thrown 50 feet into a ditch, the body of the car being torn from the chassis. The accident happened at 9:40 p. m. The injured were taken to the hospital by Police Inspector John P. Starkey and Patrolmen Harry Gerraughty and John F. Hanrahan of Revere.

The elder Farley told police that he saw the train approaching but did not believe it was so near.

"OTHER GIRLS" IN SHOOTING FOUND

The body of Grace Mills, Waltham auto shooting victim, was placed in a grave yesterday at Cedar Grove Cemetery, Dorchester Lower Mills.

During the time of the funeral services, police found the two girls with whom Joseph Foster Buckley is alleged to have been riding up to within one hour of the time he kept the fatal midnight tryst with Grace Mills.

One girl identified herself as Edna Cullen, employed in a home in Highland avenue, Newton. The other said she was Edith McLean, also a domestic. Miss McLean told police that Buckley talked of having an appointment with a girl at midnight.

Meanwhile, Buckley, charged with murder, lay in Waltham Hospital, still clinging to life that has been despaired of since he shot himself.

PENNANT PEDDLERS HELD IN CAMBRIDGE

Ten youths peddling pennants and souvenirs near the Stadium were arrested yesterday, charged with violation of a Cambridge ordinance prohibiting peddling without a license.

They were bailed for their appearance in court tomorrow.

Girls of Sub-Deb Age and Boy Friends Practice Once a Week

By KATHERINE BRADFORD

DANCING now is part of Boston's church curriculum. Girls of sub-deb age and over, and boy friends, assemble once a week for their dancing lessons, and may meet at the parish house every day to practice.

"They are taught all the modern ballroom dances excepting such dances as the Charleston," says the hostess of the classes, Mrs. Marita M. Burdett.

This innovation in church work has been introduced to Boston at Christ Church (Unitarian), Dix street and Dorchester avenue, Dorchester, of which the Rev. Robert Allen Singsen is pastor.

Aid to the Church Work

Rev. Mr. Singsen is most enthusiastic over the reception of the idea, as he believes it breaks down what he calls the artificial reserve between young people of opposite sexes, and helps secure their co operation in the work of the church.

"This is the first and only Boston church to try this method of bringing the young people together and learning the modern dances in a suitable environment," Rev. Mr. Singsen said.

"The young people meet in the parish house every Friday evening from 7:30 to 9:30 for their lessons, which are given by Miss Lila Fries a professional dancing teacher.

"The parish house has a splendid ballroom. It is just large enough to create a 'homey' atmosphere, and the young people seem very much enjoy coming here.

Sees Larger Classes

"Our parish is not very large, but about 30 young people applied for admission the day the announcement was made. I believe these classes will grow so fast they we may have to divide them or seek larger quarters.

"These classes are modelled along the lines of the Olivet Community House in Chicago, which, after the introduction of certain social activities, sent church attendance skyward, after it had dwindled steadily for ten years.

"Dancing is not the only feature we have introduced. We have woodwork and basketry classes for the younger boys, who call themselves 'The Lindbergh Club. They enjoy outdoor games and basketball, too.

"We have a dramatic club for the older boys and girls, not so much to train them in the presentation of plays, but in the art of public speaking, and courage.

Play for Entire Parish

"Occasionally a play is given for the entire parish, and this is followed by an evening of dancing and bridge. The older people enjoy bridge, and we have splendid autrooms for that purpose.

"Our object is to make the place a social and religious center for the whole family, attendance not being dependent upon church membership. Many people from outside parishes have joined our parish house activities.

"The 'Ten Times One Club,' for girls from eight to twelve, has a sewing circle. They sew Thursdays at 3:45. They also play games, and take weekly excursions.

"All our activities are under the direction of trained workers, and our object is to show young people how to put into practice the things they already know much about. We all have more knowledge than is necessary. The difficulty is to learn how to use it.

"Our parish house activities have been made possible chiefly through the fund of the Barnard Memorial Church, now unused, owing to its age. They looked for a new place to relocate, and decided to spend part of their endowment funds here in the parish."

Rev. Mr. Singsen has been pastor of the church since last April.

Painted Hair for Women

Vienna, Nov. 19.

AN INTERNATIONAL congress has pronounced sentence. Women are to wear painted hair to match the dress for evening ceremonies.

DRIVERLESS AUTO LEAPS IN WINDOW

Leaping across the sidewalk last night, a sedan crashed through the iron railings in front of No. 237 Massachusetts avenue, Back Bay, and then burst through the basement windows, hanging half in and half out of the house.

Unable to find the operator of the machine, police of East Dedham street station began an investigation on the assumption that the car had been abandoned following an accident. The machine was registered in the name of H. C. Greenlaw of No. 19 Babcock street, Quincy, with whom authorities sought to get in touch. Several packages were taken from the car by the police and held for the owner.

TOUCH OF WINTER FOR HUB TODAY

With a drop in temperature of 26 degrees in two days, Boston yesterday felt cooler than it really was, the weather man said last night. The highest Saturday mercury mark was only 49 degrees at noon. Thursday it was above 70. The mercury dropped to 32, freezing, at 10:30 p. m., and was on the downward way.

It will continue cold, but fair today. Tomorrow will be mostly cloudy and warmer with northwest winds becoming southerly.

LYNN WOMAN HURT BY BACKING AUTO

Mrs. Mary Goss, 82, of Brimbleton street, Lynn, is at the Lynn Hospital with injuries to her back, laceration of the hands and a possible fracture of the skull as a result of being struck by an auto backing out of a yard near her home last night.

The machine was operated by Sheldon P. Henderson.

Arlington Women, Husband and Child Suffer Cuts and Bruises

Four persons were injured in a collision between two autos yesterday at Elm and Forest streets, Medford.

Mrs. Leslie F. Winchendaug of Lafayette street, Arlington, owner and driver of one of the cars, received severe wounds in the forehead and scalp, and her daughter, Dorothy, five, received a bad cut on the forehead.

Both are at Lawrence Memorial Hospital. Winchendaug also was treated at that institution for minor cuts and bruises.

Louis Alperin of Washington street, Haverhill, who was riding with David Wiseblatt in the other machine, was treated at the relief station of the Metropolitan police for minor injuries and sent home. Both cars were wrecked.

CAPE SELECTMAN MISSING IN BOAT

New Bedford, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—Eugene W. Haines, 62, Sandwich selectman, past master of the De Witt Clinton Masonic lodge, has been missing since six this morning, when he left his home to go to his boat to pull lobster pots.

Coast guardsmen searched Cape Cod bay this afternoon without success and tonight men are patrolling Nobscusset Beach in Dennis on the theory the boat may have drifted ashore. Mr. Haines has a wife and daughter in Sandwich.

TO BE CONFIRMED BY NEW BISHOP

Rt. Rev. John B. Peterson, recently consecrated auxiliary bishop of the Boston Catholic diocese, will administer confirmation at St. Joseph's and the Sacred Heart Churches in Amesbury on Tuesday.

The day following he will administer the same sacrament in St. Mary's Church, Ayer; St. Catherine's Church, Graniteville, and St. John's Church, North Chelmsford.

Seeks Her Boys

MRS. JESSIE MARGARET BUDLONG, whose petition for custody of her two boys was denied in Rhode Island court

Providence, Nov. 19.—An attempt by Mrs. Jessie Margaret Budlong to gain custody of her two boys failed today in Superior Court.

It failed because a Superior Court justice has not the right to vacate the decree of another Superior Court justice, and any further attempts to gain custody may be blocked because Mrs. Budlong failed to have exceptions saved at her husband's divorce trial.

On Nov. 1, Milton J. Budlong, wealthy oil man and automobile dealer, of Newport, was granted a divorce and also the custody of John Budlong, 15, and Milton, 11.

In presenting today to Judge Charles Walsh a petition seeking to have the custody decree vacated, Mrs. Budlong declared she was "between two millstones," in her desire to see her children.

Explaining, she said that she is allowed to see the children if she first obtains permission from Budlong. But a previous injunction obtained by him restrains her from "molesting or disturbing or annoying" her ex-husband. Therefore, she declared, when she wants to ask permission to see the two boys she is deterred through fear that she may be violating the injunction.

RUM VALUED AT $6,000 SEIZED ON HUB VESSEL

Special Guard Makes Second Raid in Two Days on Steamer

Making their second raid within two days, the special squad of customs inspectors under Deputy Collector of the Port Thomas F. Finnegan, yesterday seized 324 bottles of champagne, cordials and fancy liquors, valued at $6,000, on the American steamer Pipestone County.

A raid Friday on the vessel had netted 48 bottles of rum, found in the quarters of members of the crew. After an intensive search yesterday the raiders discovered the additional liquor wrapped in gunny sacks in the bilges of the ship, after they had removed part of the cargo from No. 1 hatch.

The vessel reached port Friday from Dunkirk and Havre and when Friday's search proved almost fruitless it was decided to make a more thorough examination.

No arrests were made since no one would admit ownership of the contraband. The fancy liquor, it is believed was destined for delivery to New York trade, for which port the vessel sailed yesterday.

$2,000,000 GAIN IN REFUND ON SALARIES

The sum this year to be taken out of the state income tax and turned over to cities and towns as reimbursement to them on school teachers' salaries is $3,657,705.20 as compared with $1,122,251.25 for 1926, it was stated yesterday by Payson Smith, commissioner of education. The communities receive $100, $150, and $200 per teacher under the system.

To Pay Election Workers

Election officials who served at the city election Nov. 8 will be paid beginning tomorrow. $26,323 being available. The amounts to be paid include 339 wardens and 339 clerks at $13 each, 1,353 inspectors at $11 each and 356 janitors.

BRITISH ENVOY TALKS OF PIES, NOT POLITICS

Sir Esme Howard, Here to See Gov. Fuller, Has to Pass Up Harvard-Yale Game

Brimming over with cheerfulness, and about as happy as the owner of a pair of Yale-Harvard football tickets, Rt. Hon. Sir Esme Howard, British Ambassador, accompanied, by Lady Isabella Howard, arrived yesterday in Boston, on his way to Beverly.

Sir Esme and Lady Howard were met at the South Station by their son, Francis, an attache of the house of J. P. Morgan and Co., and Dr. Henry F. Sears, at whose estate, "The Cove," Beverly, the visitors will be guests until Monday.

While the object of the British Ambassador's visit at this time is to pay an official visit to Gov. Fuller tomorrow, and later to attend the banquet of the Massachusetts Society of the Mayflower Descendants, he expressed the hope that he would be able to get in a round of golf between times.

When asked whether it was his intention to remain in Boston long enough to enjoy a real New England Thanksgiving celebration the British Ambassador smiled sadly as he said that was a pleasure he was to be denied.

It was then that Sir Esme's mood underwent a change. He forgot his ambassadorial status, and began a discussion of matters gastronomical.

"Yes, really, yes, it would be quite delightful to stay in Boston and go in for a real Yankee Thanksgiving dinner.

"My Thanksgiving will be spent in Washington, and, of course, the question of what I shall have for dinner that day is already engaging my attention. Tradition ordains a turkey, so I dare say it will be turkey. I am not a violator of traditions, gastronomic or otherwise.

"Yes, yes, there may be a bit of roast beef, too.

"What's that? Pumpkin pie? "No, but now that you mentioned the matter," answered Sir Esme his face aglow with anticipation, "I shall look after it at once. On Monday I shall get a recipe from one of the descendants of the Mayflower Society, and then I can't go wrong. Big question, this one of pies."

"How about the uproar now going on in England concerning naval parity? And what about the committee that's going to look into the question of self-government for India, and . . ."

"Oh, yes, where were we? Pumpkin pies? Well, I shall get the recipe for that Monday. At least, I'll remind Lady Isabella that it is quite essential."

SIR ESME HOWARD, British Ambassador, visiting Boston, is mum on naval parity, but loquacious on the subject of Thanksgiving dinners.

HICCOUGH ATTACK IMPERILS DUPONT

New York, Nov. 19.—T. Coleman DuPont, U. S. Senator and capitalist, whose larynx, threatened with cancer, was removed in a delicate operation several weeks ago, has suffered a dangerous attack of hiccoughs at the Manhattan Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital.

A neurologist was called in and brought about a cessation of the nervous disorder which caused the attack, doctors who attended Senator DuPont said tonight.

The hiccough attack reopened the wounds in Mr. DuPont's throat slightly and might have caused his death had it not been stopped. When the sick man is over the convalescent period an ingenious artificial larynx is to be installed. It will give him the power of speech.

SENATORS' PITCHER APPEALS $10 FINE

Irving "Bump" Hadley, pitcher of the Washington American League team, was fined $10 by Judge Cutler in Chelsea court yesterday for failure to slow down his car at an intersecting street. He appealed.

Patrolman Blackmar testified that the Senator's hurler was doing 30 miles an hour. Hadley was defended by his father, Attorney Irving Hodley of Lynn.

$3,049 IN PURSE, LEAPS TO HER DEATH

Chicago, Nov. 19 (I.N.S.)—With three $1,000 bills in her pocketbook in addition to $40 in bills of smaller denominations, an unidentified woman about 40 plunged to death from the seventh floor tearoom balcony of a loop department store today.

Her body struck a saleswoman and three men and landed on a glass counter.

YALE GETS BRITISH WARSHIP LOG BOOKS

New Haven, Nov. 19 (A.P.). — A collection of log books of 48 British men-of-war, many of them famous in naval history, dating from 1807 to 1840, valuable pamphlets, and rare old editions were included among the list of gifts to the Yale library announced today.

The naval records were the gift of Robert Wilden Neeser, '96.

LOVE FOR OYSTERS NETS $800 PEARL

Butler, N. J., Nov. 19 (I.N.S.)—Oysters always have had a preferred place on the diet of Mrs. Flora S. Kent of Newark, N. J., who has a country home at Apshawa, near here.

She ordered them for dinner tonight. In one she found a pearl. A jeweler told her it was worth $800.

Roxbury Calls to Young Rabbi

RABBI WILLIAM DRAZEN, 24 years of age, a resident of New York city, has received a call to the synagogue Beth Hamedrash Hagodol, Crawford street, Roxbury.

Rabbi Drazen

For several months the elders of this house of worship have had the young New York divinity student under consideration and last Sunday the vote was taken which, if the rabbi accepts, will result in a permanent rabbi for the congregation.

Next Friday evening there will be a special service at the synagogue to be led by Rabbi Drazen. He is now at the Hebraian Theological Seminary, from which he graduates next March. He also graduates from New York University, where he has been majoring in philosophy. He comes from Ottawa, Canada.

The service next Friday is open to the public. Carl Newman from Vienna, the new cantor will be assisted by the choir.

WINTER'S ICY GRIP CHECKS FLOOD THREAT

Waters, Menacing Inundated Areas for Second Time, Frozen Over

Montpelier, Vt., Nov. 19.—The second flood threat in the inundated areas froze up today in the first icy grip of Winter's hand.

From Bellows Falls to the south to Montreal and the St. Lawrence valley to the north, the temperatures fell so low as to hold on the hillsides and in the feeding brooks and streams the water that ordinarily would serve to fill again the already swollen rivers.

Vermont escaped a second flood while the St. Lawrence valley region in Canada breathed relievedly at having been afforded two escapes, the first flood also having receded just in time to save the section from inundation.

Several small bridges were damaged or swept away in Vermont in the newest rise of the rivers that was checked by the sudden cold snap.

The freeze came simultaneously with a report by Secretary Herbert Hoover to President Coolidge, made in Washington, on the flood situation, the report assuring the President that all agencies engaged in relief and rehabilitation in the New England flood zones are progressing satisfactorily.

From Washington also came word tonight that James L. Felser, vice-chairman of the Red Cross, reported on his arrival at the capital that buildings in this flood zone are being repaired rapidly and that a surplus of food and clothing is at hand.

All but 70 of the 846 miles of Boston & Maine Railroad lines affected by the flood have been restored, the road officials reported today.

As shown on a chart, 101 places on the B. & M. lines suffered major damage, either through loss of bridges or through washouts.

War Secretary Davis in Flood Talk With Weeks

Dangerous airplane landing conditions at Montpelier, Vt., yesterday forced Secretary of War Dwight F. Davis to cancel a visit there for a conference with Gov. Weeks.

Secretary Davis telephoned the Governor, outlining plans for continued military aid.

Maj.-Gen. Preston Brown, commander of the First Corps Area, reported that Gov. Weeks and Secretary Davis reached an understanding concerning War Department aid

AUTOS INJURE 3 LYNN CHILDREN

Lynn's record for traffic safety slumped yesterday when three children were hurt by autos in as many accidents in different sections. Of the victims one may die.

Samuel Murphy, 9, of 89 Prospect street, received a fracture of the skull when struck on Summer street by a machine driven by Joseph Ryan of Rockmere terrace, Lynn.

Charlotte Adelstein, 2, of 17 Hanover Circle, Lynn, suffered head injuries involving possible skull fracture when struck near her home by an auto driven by Frank Frisch of Chase street.

Augustine Wynne, 5, of 2 Bright wood terrace, received injuries to his left leg and left arm when struck near his home by the auto of Lester Wheeler of Cross street, Gloucester.

All three children are in Lynn City Hospital, where the Murphy boy's name appears on the danger list.

MYSTERY IN DEATH OF WOMAN IN LYNN

A mysterious telephone "tip" sent police yesterday to the bedside of Mrs. Hazel E. Greenleaf, 29, divorcee, whom they found dying in an apartment on Liberty street, Lynn. Mrs. Greenleaf died 20 minutes later.

Police notified the medical examiner and the body was removed to local undertaking parlors. It was said last night an autopsy would be performed this morning.

It was reported Mrs. Greenleaf was the divorced wife of Albert Greenleaf.

RUTH ELDER GETS 'STAGE FRIGHT'

New York, Nov. 19.—Ruth Elder made her stage debut today. She managed to cross the stage without having to make a forced landing.

But her knees shook noticeably beneath her famous "plus fours," her hands trembled, and she wished she were doing something uneventful, like flying across the Atlantic.

The debut was made at the matinee at the Capitol Theatre. In all she made five appearances. She was dressed in her flying costume, knickers and plaid sweater. She spoke a few words to the audience she could not see across the glaring footlights. But she spoke most sincerely when she left the theatre tonight and declared:

"Oh, but this is the hardest day I have ever known! I can sleep forever. But it was thrilling."

Miss Elder said she was going to "store" all the money she will make out of her stage contract. She did not know when she again would see her husband, Lyle Womack, explaining that the week off she has at Christmas would not give her time to go to Panama.

With the weather becoming colder, the owners of some twenty-five overcoats will be glad to learn that at Station 4, Lagrange street, there is that much personal property deposited, the result of the efforts of Traffic Officers Vance and Lodge of Division 29, who have been making a canvass of the pawnshops to recover property stolen from parked cars in the theatre district.

Falls 160 Feet to Death in Smokestack

Philadelphia, Nov. 19 (A.P.)—ROBERT TUCKER, 63, a chimney repair man, plunged to death today down a 160-foot smoke-stack at a manufacturing plant.

The whistle was about to blow when Tucker slipped from his narrow perch on a scaffold at the chimney's mouth.

Workers around the stack heard Tucker's body thud against the brick chimney as he fell.

GILES HOPS, BUT IS FORCED BACK

San Francisco, Nov. 19 (I.N.S.)—Undaunted by a heavy fog that balked his first attempt to span the Pacific between the California mainland and Hawaii, Capt. Frederick A. Giles, British flier, planned to make another hop for Honolulu Sunday morning in his Boss Bluebird biplane Wanda.

The dump valves on the biplane's main gasoline tank, emptied by Giles near San Francisco lightship when he encountered fog that threatened to send the craft into a spin, have been resealed.

BOYS 'FOOLING,' 1 STABBED IN BACK

"Fooling" with a knife in the Wilton Market, 3112 Washington street Jamaica Plain, nearly cost the life last night of George Borofiski, 12, of 15 Belhaven street, Roxbury. He was accidentally stabbed in the back by James Rosche, 12, of Copley street, Roxbury.

Borofiski is in City Hospital with a deep wound. Physicians said the fact that Borofiski had on two thick sweaters, a jumper, shirt and underwear, probably saved his life.

Young Rosche entered the store to order frankfurters, according to Mrs Ida Weiner, wife of Abraham Weiner, proprietor. She noticed Rosche and Borofiski, who works in the store Saturdays and after school, playing with each other.

Stabbed, Borofiski lurched forward and limped towards her, moaning that "Jimmy stabbed me." Questioned at police Station 10 young Rosche protested he had not meant to harm Borofiski. Rosche was sent home in custody of his parents.

Secret Documents Back Coolidge's Stand on Nicaragua

statement, and during the week have published official Mexican documents sustaining the facts related by President Coolidge in support of the position taken by the United States Government.

This documentary proof, which Hearst papers will continue to publish in consecutive form for some days, was obtained from the most secret files of the Mexican Government by officials of that Government. These men were firmly opposed to the Bolshevist policies of their Government and patriotically concerned lest this Russian-Mexican brand of Bolshevism should eventually destroy their country and wreck the peace and happiness of their people.

The documents published by Hearst papers during the past week were therefore brought to this country by these Mexican officials, who offered them to the Hearst papers because they realized that in this manner they would secure widest publication of the facts revealed by the records. The revelation of the amazing facts contained in the documents, the Mexican officials hoped, might result in ultimate good to their country.

One of these revelatory documents is an order issued and signed by President Calles on June 2, 1926, directing his Treasury Department to pay the sum of a hundred thousand pesos ($50,000) to Dr. Pedro Jose Zepeda, "for the purchase of arms and munitions for the Liberal Army of Nicaragua." Dr. Zepeda was the Mexico City agent of the Nicaraguan Liberal Party and of the revolutionary faction headed by Dr. Juan Bautista Sacasa, who was present in Mexico at the time the order was issued.

Though this document is but one of seventeen published by the Hearst newspapers thus far, it constitutes by itself documentary proof that the Mexican Government not only supported the Sacasa revolution in Nicaragua once it was going, but actually helped organize and finance it. In the document the specific statement was made by Calles that the money was to be used "for the purchase of arms and munitions" for the Liberal Army of Nicaragua.

More Thousands for Zepeda

There was no "Liberal Army" in the field at that time. It existed only in the minds of the Calles-Sacasa conspirators, who were plotting to overthrow the pro-American Government of Nicaragua and replace it with one hostile to the United States.

Heavy fighting broke out in August of last year, some two months after the issuance of this first Calles order in favor of the Sacasa rebels, the text of which follows:

To the Citizen Secretary of the Treasury and Public Credit:

You will please direct the Treasurer-General of the nation to issue a pay warrant in favor of Dr. Pedro Jose Zepeda for the sum of one hundred thousand pesos, national gold ($50,000), for the purchase of arms and munitions for the Liberal Army of Nicaragua.

Charge this item provisionally to secret expenditures of the Presidential General Staff while it is being considered how the sum should be applied.

EFFECTIVE SUFFRAGE—NO RE-ELECTION.
The National Palace, Mexico, D. F., June 2, 1926.
The President of the Republic,
P. ELIAS CALLES.

SG—PEC

The second order for a money payment to the Sacasa rebels was signed by Calles on June 3, 1926, one day later than the first. It was for fifty thousand pesos ($25,000), to be used by the Sacasa agent, Dr. Zepeda, for expenses in the performances of a mission of a secret character confided to him by Calles. Zepeda turned the money over to "President" Sacasa, who used it to establish a rebel "junta" in Guatemala City, and to finance the comings and goings of secret agents.

The order follows, textually:

To the Citizen Secretary of the Treasury and Public Credit:

You will please direct the Treasurer-General of the Nation to issue a pay warrant for the sum of fifty thousand pesos, national gold ($25,000), in favor of Dr. Pedro Jose Zepeda, for expenses in the performance of a mission of a secret character confided to him by the Executive.

You will order at the same time that the pay warrant be charged to secret expenditures of the Presidential Staff.

EFFECTIVE SUFFRAGE—NO RE-ELECTION.
The National Palace, Mexico, D. F., June 3, 1926.
Gral. J. A/RL/PEC. P. ELIAS CALLES.

The orders issued by Treasury Department officials for the purpose of carrying out the instructions of President Calles are in the possession of the Hearst papers. Here is the text of one:

To the Treasurer-General of the Nation:

By direction of the Citizen President of the Republic you will please order the issuance of a pay warrant for the sum of a hundred thousand pesos, national gold ($50,000), in favor of Dr. Pedro J. Zepeda, for the purchase of arms and munitions for the Liberal Army of Nicaragua.

You will please charge this provisionally to secret expenditures of the Presidential General Staff, while it is being considered in what form the sum should be applied.

This is communicated to you for your information and compliance.

EFFECTIVE SUFFRAGE—NO RE-ELECTION.
The Secretary of the Treasury and Public Credit.

Mexico's Anti-American Plots

Additional documents reproduced by Hearst papers related the payment of 10,000 pesos ($5,000) to Dr. Carlos Leon, a Venezuelan Radical, virulently anti-American. Dr. Leon took an active part in organizing the Sacasa "Liberal" insurrection, which was intended to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua and thus prepare the way for the carrying out of the secret anti-American projects of the Mexican Government.

It was understood that, following the establishment of Sacasa in Nicaragua at the head of a puppet government subject to the orders of President Calles, Leon was to organize a revolt in Venezuela, the Government of that country being friendly to the United States and therefore objectionable to the Mexican Executive.

The "Liberal Army" which was recruited, armed and drilled on Mexican soil, with Mexican military instructions, landed in Nicaragua and began active operations against the defending Government troops in August of 1926. The Government forces were somewhat superior in numbers to the expeditionary forces sent from Mexico, but not so well armed. Nevertheless, they fought well, and for several weeks the conflict was bloody, but indecisive.

The ardor of the Liberal forces was cooling somewhat, and they began to question why Dr. Juan Bautista Sacasa, their titular leader, remained safe in his refuge in Guatemala, instead of leading them in their struggle. The Liberals, both those recruited in Mexico and those who joined them later in Nicaragua, were willing to talk peace.

Our State Department gauged this willingness correctly and issued invitations to a peace conference to be held on an American warship anchored off Corinto, on the Pacific coast of Nicaragua. The invitations were quickly accepted by both the Nicaraguan Government and the Liberal leaders, the negotiations being under favorable auspices, and a peace agreement seemed probable on the basis of Liberal participation in the Government, with several posts in the Cabinet, but with a Conservative President.

This was not to the liking of President Calles. The Mexican Executive ordered his Ambassador in Guatemala to inform Dr. Sacasa, who was residing in Guatemala City, that unless the negotiations were conducted on the basis of an agreement concluded in Mexico City between the Mexican Government and the Liberals, they should be broken off and fighting resumed.

These instructions were communicated to Aaron Saenz, the Mexican Minister of Foreign Relations, in a telegram sent him by General Jose Alvarez, Chief of the Mexican President's Staff. The text follows:

To the Citizen Secretary of Foreign Relations:

By order of the President you will please communicate urgently with Ambassador Cravioto (Mexican Ambassador to Guatemala), and have him inform Sacasa that if the peace arrangements at Corinto are not based on arrangements concluded in this city, with Liberal elements controlling the executive power, the Mexican Government will retire all moral and material aid immediately. You will instruct Cravioto to suspend all financial aid to Sacasa if the latter does not reply in a satisfactory manner.

Chief of the President's Staff,
GENERAL J. ALVAREZ.

The immediate effect of this telegram, dated October 18, 1926, was all that the Mexican Executive could have desired, though a later effect was that of American military intervention in Nicaragua and the final effects are impossible to predict.

Ambassador Cravioto's delivery of the Calles ultimatum to Dr. Sacasa, in Guatemala City, resulted in hurried conferences between that Liberal chieftain and his advisers. Cravioto's representations, combined with the Mexican Executive's threats to cut off all money payments, sufficed to bring Sacasa and his followers into line with the uncompromising position taken by Calles.

Upon receipt of Cravioto's report that Sacasa had consented to call off the peace talk, renew the fighting and establish his "government" on Nicaraguan territory, Foreign Minister Saenz was able to inform Calles, through the medium of a telegram to the latter's Chief of Staff, General Alvarez, that Mexico had triumphed. The telegram follows:

To the Chief of the President's Staff, General Jose Alvarez:

Please inform the President that Cravioto today communicates the following:

"Sacasa, after a long conference with Zepeda and de la Selva, has decided to discontinue the peace conference at Corinto and to depart immediately for Puerto Cabezas to establish the Constitutional Government.

"At a meeting which I held with the Ministers of Salvador, Costa Rica and Honduras, and the Foreign Minister of Guatemala, we agreed to recommend to our respective governments the immediate recognition of Sacasa, in order to lend moral force to his Government.

"I beg you earnestly to call this recommendation to the attention of the President, recommending to him that Mexico should be the first to extend recognition in order to solidify our policy in Nicaragua for the future. I have given fifty thousand pesos ($25,000) to Sacasa for preliminary expenses incidental to the installation of his Government."

I communicate this to you for your information and await your further instructions.

SECRETARY SAENZ.

The Hearst papers are in possession of these telegrams, obtained, like others reproduced in these articles, from Mexican Government employes who feel that the ultimate welfare of their country will be promoted by giving the American people accurate information of the strange doings of their Government.

The failure of the Corinto conference to end civil warfare in Nicaragua was a triumph for President Calles and one of the most notable victories of Mexican over American diplomacy in recent years. It was a humiliating defeat for the American State Department, which had arranged for the negotiations to be conducted aboard an American warship, technically American soil. The prestige of the United States therefore was involved, and every effort was exerted to bring about a peace agreement which would put an end to the conflict and satisfy both the pro-Mexican Liberals and the pro-American Conservatives.

Pro-Mexican Newspaper Propaganda

Our State Department, as Secretary Kellogg disclosed later, was aware that the real purpose of the Sacasa revolution was the erection of an anti-American Government in Nicaragua. Full documentary proof was lacking, but it was known that President Calles proposed, by force or otherwise, to put Mexico at the head of a Bolshevist Federation to include the five Central American Republics of Nicaragua, Guatemala, El Salvador, Costa Rica and Honduras. It was proposed later, as opportunity offered, to add the Caribbean countries of Venezuela, Colombia, Haiti and San Domingo, and perhaps eventually Cuba and Porto Rico.

President Coolidge, after some hesitation due to incomplete information as to the origin of the Liberal revolt and its real significance, had decided it must not succeed, and his decision was drawing the fire of radical and pro-Mexican elements everywhere in the world. Wherever Mexican money was needed to intensify the fire, it was forthcoming.

The seat of the Nicaraguan Liberal Revolutionary Government was established by Dr. Sacasa at Puerto Cabezas, on the northern Atlantic coast of that country, in the first week of December, 1926, and was recognized immediately by Mexico.

President Calles at the same time issued an order on the Mexican Treasury Department for a hundred thousand pesos ($50,000), to be turned over to Alfonzo Cravioto, the Mexican Ambassador in Guatemala, for pro-Mexican newspaper propaganda. The text of the order follows:

To the Citizen Secretary of the Treasury and Public Credit:

You will please direct the Treasurer General of the Nation to issue a pay-warrant in favor of Citizen Alfonso Cravioto, Ambassador of Mexico in Guatemala, for the sum of 100,000 pesos ($50,000), for expenses for newspaper propaganda in favor of Mexico.

A Puppet Nicaraguan Government

This sum of money was given to the Mexican Ambassador in Guatemala for the specific purpose of influencing newspapers in favor of Mexico, and was ordered charged to "secret expenditures" of the Mexican Government. President Calles was trying to hide from the world, and most of all from his own people, the nature of his efforts to set up a "Made in Mexico" puppet Government in Nicaragua and to subsidize the press of Central America and other parts of the world in favor of that Government.

The fifty thousand dollars given to Ambassador Cravioto on December 6 lasted him just nine days. On December 15, he asked for and received twenty-five thousand dollars more for the same purpose. The order for this additional amount follows:

To the Citizen Secretary of the Treasury and Public Credit:

You will please direct the Citizen Treasurer General of the Nation to order the transfer of the sum of fifty thousand pesos, national gold ($25,000), through the Bank of Mexico and its branch in Zuchiate, to the Citizen Ambassador of Mexico in Guatemala, Alfonzo Cravioto, the said sum to be applied to propaganda expenses in favor of Mexico.

You will charge this item to special expenditures of the Department of Foreign Relations.

Calles Sends $1,000,000

On February 3 of this year, when the Mexican-Liberal forces were in possession of all eastern Nicaragua except the "neutral" zones held by American marines, President Calles ordered his Treasury Department to furnish Ambassador Cravioto with a million dollars for the purpose of financing the final stages of the Nicaraguan revolution.

The order follows:

To the Citizen Secretary of the Treasury and Public Credit:

You will please direct the Citizen Treasurer General of the Nation to issue orders to the Bank of Mexico, S. A., to deposit, through the proper channels and with the accustomed safeguards, the sum of 2,000,000 pesos, national gold ($1,000,000), to the order of the Citizen Ambassador of Mexico in Guatemala, Alfonzo Cravioto.

Copies to:
The Manager of the Bank of Mexico
The Controller General of the Nation

This million dollars was used, though vainly, for the purpose of overthrowing the Government of a weaker country tried by Calles and found guilty of the double crime of "Conservatism" and "pro-Americanism." Smaller sums were employed from time to time, not only to influence newspapers, but to send Latin-American and Russian agitators into Guatemala City and other strategic points. Their specific missions varied, but were always connected in some way with the general Bolshevik scheme.

Horacio Blanco Fombona, a Venezuelan radical and occasional contributor to American magazines, was one of those selected for such work by Calles, who ordered $2,500 given to him for a trip to Guatemala. The Hearst newspapers published a fac-simile of this original order during the past week.

President Coolidge, Secretary of State Kellogg and many other public men of the United States have expressed the belief that a tie existed binding the Mexican Government more or less closely to the Bolshevist Government of Russia, but documentary proof of that tie never has been forthcoming heretofore. The Hearst papers have original documents signed by President Calles proving that the connection between the Russian and Mexican Governments is even closer than has been suspected by our public men.

While Armistice Day was being celebrated by millions of Americans on November 11, 1926, President Calles was ordering his Treasury Department to pay the sum of 50,000 pesos ($50,000) over to Pablo Palovichi, a Communist propagandist, for "Communist propaganda expenses to be directed by Mr. A. B., Secretary of the Russian Legation in Mexico."

The original order is in the possession of the Hearst papers. Its text follows:

To the Citizen Secretary of the Treasury and Public Credit:

You will please direct the Citizen Treasurer General of the Nation to order the issuance of a pay-warrant in favor of Pablo Palovichi, for the sum of 50,000 pesos, national gold ($25,000), for Communist propaganda expenses directed by Mr. A. B., secretary of the Russian Legation in Mexico.

Order that this sum be paid in gold by the Bank of Mexico, without the usual signed receipts, and that no entry of this payment be made on the books of the Controller's Department.

SG/PEC/RL P. ELIAS CALLES.

Direct proof that the Mexican Government is teaching Communism to its school children is contained in another original document now in the possession of the Hearst papers and bearing the signature of the Mexican Executive. It is an order issued by President Calles on his Treasury Department for five thousand dollars to be paid to Pablo Palovichi for "expenses in the printing of books of Socialist propaganda for the Communist schools for the Young," of Mexico City. The text of this order follows:

To the Citizen Secretary of the Treasury and Public Credit:

You will please direct the Treasurer General of the Nation to issue a pay-warrant for the sum of $5,000 in favor of Pablo Palovichi, for expenses in the printing of books of Socialist propaganda, for the Communist Schools for the Young, of this Capital.

Charge this to secret expenditures of the Federal Executive. I communicate this to you for your information and compliance.

Calles' Secret Expenditure

Dr. Gustave Petrovichi, one of the propagandists imported from Soviet Russia by the Mexican Government, did such effective work among the adolescents and adults of Mexico in 1926 that he was sent into the neighboring Republic of Guatemala by Calles on a similar mission early this year. Reports from Guatemala City are that Petrovichi converted many Indians to Communism in the Peten District of northern Guatemala.

The Mexican Executive's order on his Treasury Department for the financing of Petrovichi's trip was unusually liberal, even for Calles. The order follows:

To the Citizen Secretary of the Treasury and Public Credit:

You will please direct the Citizen Treasurer-General of the Nation to issue a pay warrant to Pablo Palovichi for the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, in order that he may deliver it to Dr. Gustave Petrovichi for propaganda expenses among the Indians of the Zone of Peten in Guatemala.

Order at the same time that this item be charged to secret expenditures of the President's General Staff.

EFFECTIVE SUFFRAGE—NO RE-ELECTION
The National Palace, Mexico, D. F., Jan 5, 1926.
The President of the Republic,
SG/PEC/RL. P. ELIAS CALLES.

President Calles' direct contact with the Communist Government of Russia is further revealed through a letter of July 25, 1925, addressed to Don Basilio Badillo, the Mexican Minister in Russia. In his letter Calles informed the Minister that he has ordered $100,000 transferred to him by way of London and Barcelona, Spain, "in order to avoid any indiscretion prejudicial to our interests."

Calles instructed that the $100,000 be delivered to one "Livitnoff," explaining that he had met "this comrade" during his last trip to Berlin, and that he "appeared to me a great and sincere friend of Mexico and of our cause, and the funds which may be confided to him for our propaganda will be employed effectively. I congratulate you for this arrangement."

President Calles, further in the letter to his London Minister, asking him to "please keep me informed of the most interesting developments in the world struggle, and express my admiration and respect to Comrade Livitnoff, desiring him every success in our struggle."

Calles made a European trip in 1924, after his election, but before his inauguration as President of Mexico. In his letter he refers to Comrade "Livitnoff." One of the outstanding figures of the present Russian Government for many years has been Comrade Litvinoff.

In tomorrow's edition of the Boston Evening American further startling revelations from the Mexican archives will be published.

U. S. CAPITAL IS WELCOME, SAYS SIR THOS. TAIT

Railroad Builder Scoffs at Idea Canada Is Worried Over Influx of Our Money

Between boosting Canada, agriculturally and industrially, building railroads in Australia and flitting from Threadneedle street, London, to Wall Street, New York, at frequent intervals, there is nothing Sir Thomas Tait of Montreal likes better than talking football.

The eminent Canadian railroad builder and industrialist, who arrived in Boston yesterday, declared that while the chief object of his visit was to attend the annual dinner of the Massachusetts Society of Mayflower Descendants to be held Monday night at the Somerset Hotel, he was going to give the Hub a thorough "once over."

Sir Thomas said there were many impressions concerning the relations between the United States and the Dominion that should be corrected.

CAPITAL WELCOMED.

"For instance, the recent reports that Canada is becoming apprehensive as to the influence United States capital is to play in its economic and industrial development are quite absurd.

"Today there is more than $3,000,000,000 of United States capital invested in the industrial enterprises of Canada, and, instead of trying to stem the flow of capital, we are doing just the opposite. We welcome capital from any source, provided it is used for legitimate industry.

"So vast are the natural resources of Canada that no amount of outside capital can ever make the country an economic annex of any other. Again, it must not be forgotten that we have taken our cue from President Coolidge, the author of the most stirring of slogans, 'Have faith in Massachusetts.'

"HAVE FAITH IN CANADA."

"Thus, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the rallying cry of all Canadians is, 'Have Faith in Canada.' And Canadians are manifesting that faith in a most substantial way, investing heavily in securities of Canadian projects.

"Our great need at the present time is population, for we have vast stretches of land, so vast that we are in a position to take care of an empire of people.

"Of course, we wish for the land those whose ideals and aims are of the Anglo-Saxonic variety. Pee Scottish lads and lassies, and the boys and girls from England, Wales, and certain sections of Ireland re being welded into a class of citizenry that bids fair to make Canada, in time, as great as the United States."

Unworried

SIR THOMAS TAIT, Montreal industrialist, who doesn't care how much American capital enters Canada.

GIRL FOUND AS BROTHER DIES, FLOOD VICTIM

Busy Police Notify Margaret Curtin Just Too Late of His Plight

Death out-raced Margaret Curtin of Cambridge in her attempt to reach the bedside of her brother, James Curtin, a flood victim, in a Rutland, Vt., hospital.

The police force of Cambridge, already pressed to its limits yesterday to care for the football crowds, called every agency into play to relieve a dying man's last pain and grant his final wish to see his sister before he died.

The news only this: A girl named Margaret Curtin was employed by a private family somewhere in Cambridge.

Yet with this meagre information to work on the girl was found by Sergt. McCoffrey and Lieut. Joseph J. Donohue at a home in Mt. Auburn street.

She had read of the flood sufferers, but without any realization that the tragedy of the ruin to the north would be brought so near to her.

Hurriedly she packed her bag, and the sergeants took her to the station, where a taxi was waiting to lose her to the North Station.

But even as she entered the cab there was a ring at the telephone. "Rutland, Vermont, is calling again," said the operator.

And then came the word that death would not wait, that James Curtin's last hours could not be solved by the sight of one of his family. He had died.

Now, the only solace remaining to Margaret Curtin is caring for the body of the brother whom she found only to lose again.

ON HONEYMOON, DISCOVER THEY AREN'T WEDDED

Julius P. Wittmark and Alice Prince Get New Knot Tied 2 Months After 'Marriage'

New York, Nov. 19.—What might easily form the central plot of a Broadway farce was revealed today when Julius P. Wittmark, Jr., 24, son of a music publisher, and Alice Prince, 23, were married by Deputy Clerk McCormick at the marriage bureau.

Two months ago the couple went through an elaborate wedding ceremony at the St. Regis Hotel. Afterwards they departed for their honeymoon in the South.

Several days ago young Wittmark and his bride were trying to recall the persons who had witnessed their marriage, certificate. To their consternation, they could not remember having signed one. A hurried telephone to the municipal building revealed that there was no record there of their marriage.

A hurried distance telephone conversation with the Rev. Dr. Anshacher, who officiated at the ceremony in the St. Regis, disclosed that he is seriously ill in a Cincinnati hospital. His condition is too serious to permit hospital attaches to ask him if he signed the certificate and mailed it to the New York authorities.

Anway, the Wittmarks, who have been living in an apartment at No. 334 West Eighty-Second street, attended everything today by going through the civil ceremony.

Joyful Reunion

MRS. MILDRED S. MILLS, of Everett, reunited with her baby who was taken away by a little girl who wanted a "doll carriage."

GIRL TOOK BABY TO GET CARRIAGE

Because a little girl had a longing for a doll carriage—a longing which her impoverished parents could not gratify—she took a baby carriage, with a real live baby in it. This is the story behind the mysterious "baby kidnaping case" which created a furore in Everett as police saw it yesterday.

They are now seeking a little girl, poorly dressed, about 8 or 9 years old, as a "kidnaper."

On Friday afternoon Mrs. Mildred S. Mills of 70 Cleveland avenue, Everett, went into the shoe store at 417-A Broadway, that city, leaving her month-old infant, Mildred, in a baby carriage outside.

She emerged 15 minutes later to find carriage and baby gone. Lieutenant Inspector George C. Kenney and Patrolman Fred Wentworth discovered that an empty baby carriage, not Mrs. Mills, had been "parked" outside the shoe store.

An hour later, on Lewis street, the officers discovered Mrs. Mills' missing carriage, but minus the baby.

Later, Mrs. Mary Weatherbee of 51 Foster street, while walking along Summer street, noticed a little girl carrying a baby. She questioned the child and was told: "I guess this baby's lost, so I'm taking it to the Catholic school."

Mrs. Weatherbee had heard that a baby was missing so she took the infant from the little girl's arms, telling her she would care for it. The girl lost no time in getting out of sight.

Mrs. Weatherbee carried the infant to Everett square, where Mrs. Mills, almost hysterical, was keeping vigil in front of the shoe store, and a reunion followed.

LYNN MAN ON AUTO TRIP DEAD IN CRASH

Mrs. Ida Pease of No. 55 Addison avenue, Lynn, mother of an 11-month-old daughter was prostrated last night following news from Larchmont, N. Y., that her husband, Charles L. Pease, had been killed in an automobile accident. No details of the accident were given in the report of the Larchmont police to Lynn headquarters.

Pease, who was an adjustment agent for the United Shoe Machinery Co., left Lynn Friday night by automobile for a pleasure trip to New York.

BADLY WOUNDED IN BATTLE WITH POLICE

New York, Nov. 19 (I. N. McLaughlin sought as a burglar, was taken to Knickerbocker Hospital.

GUN RUNNING PLOT SUSPECT SURRENDERS

Arrest Is Accused of Complicity in War Shipments to Mexico

TO DEMAND ARMS' RETURN

Declares He Possessed Them Lawfully as Dealer in Firearms

By Universal Service

Oakland, Cal., Nov. 19.—John B. Mannerstam, reputed "man behind the gun" of alleged international gun running conspiracies, ended a State and Federal search for him today when he surrendered to Police Chief Glavinovich of Albany.

Mannerstam appeared at the office of the chief shortly after his attorneys and his son, John Mannerstam, Jr., had arranged with Judge Hickman for his release in $2,500.

He is accused in a State warrant of felony in possession of machine guns, the first time the new anti-machine gun law has been used in California.

TO DEMAND ARMS' RETURN.

Mannerstam declared he would demand return of $60,000 worth of arms, high explosives and war equipment, seized in his Albany home two days ago, on grounds that he possessed them lawfully as a dealer in firearms.

He denied authorship of letters seized in the house. These implicated him, according to Dist.-Atty. Warren, with shipments of war supplies to revolutionists in Mexico. He is accused also of participation in shipments to war parties in China.

Mannerstam admitted friendship with U. S. Senator Borah, but denied he knew Guillermo Rosas, Jr., reputed agent for Mexican revolutionists. Borah and Rosas were named in letters found in the Albany house.

AWAITING TRIAL.

Mannerstam denied that arms from his establishment in San Francisco had been sent to Chicago, Cleveland or Mid-West gangsters and rum-runners.

It was on information from Kent, O., and Chicago that the Oakland officers raided the Albany arsenal house.

Mannerstam, with others, is awaiting trial in Los Angeles on Federal indictments returned following seizure of arms shipments said by the government to have been intended for Mexican revolutionary use.

Judge Hickman fixed Wednesday for arraignment on the felony warrant.

240-FOOT YACHT FOR BROOKLINE MAN

Bath, Me., Nov. 19 (A.P.)—A contract for the construction of a steel yacht with a length over all of 240 feet for a Brookline, Mass., man, the second largest ever built at the plant, has been closed by the Bath Iron Works Corporation, President William S. Newell announced today.

The craft will be driven by twin-screw engines and must be ready for delivery by July 15 next. The contract price and name of the owner were withheld.

CURLEY AT GAME BIRTHDAY TODAY

Former Mayor James M. Curley will celebrate his 53rd birthday today. Yesterday he ushered it in with his fill of excitement when he joined the cheering spectators at the Stadium.

With Mrs. Curley and the three sons of the family, Paul, Leo and James M., Jr., the ex-mayor was pushed through the football traffic to the Stadium and witnessed the Harvard-Yale battle.

He kept his injured wrist, which was fractured in a fall several weeks ago, under his coat and protected from the keen wind, but he said it was almost mended.

In the morning, before heading for the Stadium, the ex-Mayor was "at home" to friends in the Curley residence, No. 350 Jamaicaway, Jamaica Plain.

Fitchburg, Nov. 19.—Samuel E. Lane, a farmer, is 80 years old, but he has an eye to the future and doesn't intend to drift into old age without a fireside companion. He announced today he has been married since October 20 to the former Mrs. May Heselton, 70, of West Bridgewater, Vt.

TROTZKY AIDES READY TO FLEE SOVIET WRATH

Fear to Face Vengeful Power of Stalin-Bukharin Faction

Moscow, Nov. 19 (I.N.S.).—With the crushing wrath of the Soviets and the third internationale directed against them, many followers of Leon Trotzky and Gregory Zinoviev, the opposition leaders, are preparing to leave Moscow, it was learned today.

These Communists, who fear to face the vengeful power of the Stalin-Bukharin faction, are practically all citizens of other countries.

In less than a fortnight the 15th Congress of the All Russian Communist party will meet here, and it is virtually certain that the expulsion of Trotzky, Zinoviev and many of their lesser known adherents from the Communist party will be officially ratified.

THREE COURSES OPEN.

Trotzky's future plans are in doubt. It is possible he has not yet decided upon his political activities.

Once commander-in-chief of the Red army and navy, Trotzky has been ousted from one government post after another, and has been expelled from the Communist internationale, the executive committee of the Russian Communist party and from the party itself.

There are three courses open to the former commissar:

1. He can retire from active politics and devote his time to writing, continuing to live in Moscow.

TOO POWERFUL TO JAIL.

2. He can continue his warfare against the powers behind the Society secretly with sub rosa meetings and "underground" printing presses, or,

3. He can accept some harmless, semi-official mission to leave the country or take refuge in exile.

Trotzky is admittedly too big a man to put into jail. Despite repressive measures his followers in the Red party run into thousands. His lieutenants, such as Zinoviev, Kameney and Christian Hakovsky are astute politicians and bold in action.

TWO LINERS DUE; ONE SAILS TODAY

Two trans-Atlantic liner arrivals and one sailing will enliven the f.ort of Boston today, with the Canadian Laconia and the Hamburg-American Cleveland docking, and the White Star Cedric leaving.

The Cleveland is due at Commonwealth Pier at 9 A. M., docking at East Boston between 1 and 2 P. M. The Cedric will arrive from New York at 1 P. M., sailing for Queenstown and Liverpool an hour later.

MELLISH'S DEATH PUZZLES POLICE

New York, Nov. 19 (A.P.) The mystery of the disappearance of Jos. A. Mellish and a fire which destroyed his warehouse last Wednesday was cleared today with the finding of his body in the ruins, but another mystery still surrounds circumstances of his death.

The body was discovered under a mass of wreckage, in a sitting posture in the rear seat of a sedan. It was remote from an entrance through which Mellish had dashed into the blazing structure shortly before Gremont came, and police were at a loss to explain why he had gone so far through the fire and smoke.

One theory was that he had found himself cut off from his office by the rapid spread of the flames and sought another entrance near which his body was found. Why he had climbed into the sedan fireman were unable to explain.

Employes at the warehouse said they had left the blazing building with Mellish, and were making for the street when he stopped suddenly as though he had forgotten something and ran into the building, his arms shielding his face. It was thought he had gone to the rescue of a dog locked in his office.

The fire which razed the $500,000 structure leased by Mellish from the New York Central Railroad, also destroyed 1,500 automobiles valued at $2,000,000.

Mme. Mercy Mellish, his wife and a former Metropolitan opera singer, aided firemen in their quest for the body.

CAROL MAY RETURN IF HE MEETS TERMS

Vienna, Nov. 19 (I.N.S.).—Premier Bratiano of Rumania, who has led the opposition to former Crown Prince Carol's return, is said to be sending an envoy to Paris to inform Carol of the conditions under which he may reenter his native land, according to an unconfirmed report from Bucharest today.

Every Woman to Be an Aviatrix, at Least in Hat

By GERTRUDE, LADY DICIES

London, Nov. 19.

A RICH leaf brown net and felt hat in a small shape with an upstanding brim which I saw this week, had a narrow veil on it which just shaded the eyes and was allowed to fall in triangular shaped covers over the ears.

More pronounced ear covers are definite flaps copied from Ruth Elder's flying helmet.

They are usually on hats of soft materials.

'EMPRESS' CHARLOTTE LEAVES $14,000,000

Brussels, Nov. 19 (I.N.S.).—"Empress" Charlotte, widow of Maximilian, the unfortunate one time ruler of Mexico, must have left an estate of at least $20,000,000 francs (at present rate of exchange about $14,000,000) it was revealed today.

GERMAN SPY ADMITS THAW 'BLACKMAIL'

Swiss Tell's Police He Sought $5,000 So as to Rejoin His Wife

Pittsburgh, Nov. 19 (A.P.)—A plot to blackmail the Thaw family reached the end of its trail today with a confession by Frederick J. Wipf, 40, former manager of a Pittsburgh baking plant, that he beat a maid in the home of Mrs. William Thaw Jr., and later sent a letter to her threatening further violence to other members of the household unless $5,000 was forthcoming.

Wipf, who said he was a native of Switzerland and a former German spy, admitted responsibility for the fantastic extortion plot, detectives said, after he was identified by the maid. He was said to have declared he wanted the money to return to his wife in Switzerland.

His plan was frustrated by detectives to whom Mrs. Thaw gave the letter containing detailed instructions for the money to be thrown from an automobile at a signal on a designated route.

"Irs. Thaw's machine passed the indicated spot with a detective at the wheel and another hidden inside, but nothing happened.

Meantime, Wipf was picked up by other detectives concentrated along the route. When a mask and a pistol were found in his pockets, he was taken before the Thaw maid and other employes and identified.

Wipf has been in Pittsburgh for two years. He came here from Regina, Sask., where for ten years he was employed as a bookkeeper. Detectives quoted him as saying he was a German spy in Canada.

O'HARA, VETERAN IN FISH BUSINESS, DEAD

Francis J. O'Hara, 79, pioneer fish dealer and oldest man in the fish business in Boston, died suddenly yesterday at his home, No. 34 Myrtle avenue, Winchester. Mr. O'Hara was directing workmen in removing a tree when he collapsed. In the fish business for 52 years, he was head of the Francis J. O'Hara Fish Co., vice-president of the Winchester National Bank, director of the Columbia Trust Co. and of the Boston Fish Market Corporation.

He is survived by three sons, Francis J. Jr., William V. and John F., and four daughters, Agnes O'Hara, Hannah O'Hara, Mrs. Mary Donahue and Mrs. Jennie Dunn.

SISTER HOSANNA DIES SUDDENLY IN HUB

Sister Hosanna, for 20 years attached to the Dominican Convent of Fall River, died yesterday at Carney Hospital. Sister Hosanna came to Boston with two other Dominican Sisters yesterday to visit the Convent of the Good Shepherd, Hunting ton avenue. While at that institution she was stricken with cerebral hemmorhage. She died a half-hour after arrival at the hospital.

She was 45 years old, daughter of Benjamin Champagne of Lewiston, Me.

Lieut. Wilson Quits Marine Engineering to Fly Again

Member of British Royal Air Force During World War

Out of Game Nine Years, He Returns to His First Love by Mere Chance

By FRANKLIN P. COLLIER, JR.

LIEUTENANT GEORGE GORDON WILSON of the British Royal Air Force had not flown during the nine years since the war until the past Summer when, after a few hops, he signed up as a pilot for the Lowell flying service.

He now is flying daily at the Boston Airport, which is serving as the temporary headquarters of his company until its field behind Fort Hill Park in Lowell is ready.

"It certainly seems good to be flying again," said Lieutenant Wilson. "I didn't want to get out of aviation at the close of the war but the demobilization of trained Royal Air Force pilots made fliers something of a drug on the market in the British Empire.

Never Lost the Yearning

"As a result I continued my apprenticeship as a marine engineer and had to forget about things aeronautical. When I came to this country in 1922 my ambitions still were based on engineering rather than flying. But last Summer a good many memories were suddenly awakened as I watched a plane land at Lowell.

"The ship needed considerable overhauling, and I couldn't resist donning a pair of overalls to help with the repairs. When we had finished the owners let me take the stick on a hop. That ride brought back all my love of flying, and a short time later when Fred and Dick Major offered me a job as pilot with the Lowell flying service I signed up with them very quickly.

"It required only a few hours to regain a feel of the air and to be at home at the stick again. Lieutenant Adolph Backstrom of the Bay State Flying Service, who also was an R. A. F. flier, acted as my instructor over this period.

Planes Are Improved

"I can notice a decided improvement in the modern ship over the types we used during the war. Planes of today are much easier to handle. They fly better and control better. They give a greater sense of security. At the same time the principles behind flying are the same, as they always will be, and it does not require much imagination now for me to think that I have been flying right along.

Lieutenant Wilson had several unusual experiences during his original training period.

"On one occasion my motor cut out over the heart of the city of Dublin when I was flying at less than 1,000 feet," he said. "The outlook was rather depressing as I looked down at the cobblestone street traffic getting closer every moment.

"Off in the distance was the open stretch of the old 'Phoenix' racetrack. By stretching my glide I just managed to reach the field, where there was ample room for a successful landing. After adjusting the motor I was able to take off from this same area. I landed at this field several times after that just for the fun of it.

Landed on Golf Course

"Another time my landing gear sunk up to the axles on a forced landing on the beach at Kingston, Ireland. The plane was heavy, and when it came time for me to take off I didn't feel much like pushing it to a high and dry place by hand.

"I resorted to some very poor flying tactics, but they worked out all right. I opened the throttle wide, pushed the stick forward and weaved the rudder back and forth. The ship pulled out of the sand, and it sure was an easy matter to take to the air.

"I once had a forced landing on a golf course in Ireland near my training field at Baldonel. Becoming acquainted here, I drove flew back to play the course. On these occasions the mechanics at Baldonell were puzzled as to how I could be away three or four hours and return with a full tank of gas. I never told them the real explanation, and some very amusing theories resulted."

Some Natural Fliers

"Normal individuals usually can learn to fly in from five to ten hours taken in instruction periods of from 20 to 40 minutes.

"As a rule, motorcycle police and other good motorcycle riders make good fliers. Such individuals seem to be mechanically inclined in the way a pilot must be. They seem to have a good sense of balance."

Lieutenant Wilson was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1899. He was trained at the Oxford School of Aeronautics, the Uxbridge School of Gunnery and Bombing, and the No. 29 Training Depot Station at Baldonell, Ire. He received his commission when he was 18 years old.

He is married, but has no children. He has flown some 200 hours.

"GOOD MOTORCYCLE RIDERS, as a rule, make good fliers," said Lieutenant G. G. Wilson. In this case it should not be hard to transform some of the motorcycle police into air police at any time.

4 DIE AS CAR HITS POLE AT WEBSTER

Webster, Nov. 19.—Four men lost their lives in an auto crash here today, when the machine with five passengers struck a telephone pole, caromed off two stone posts and turned over.

The dead are:

Fred Barry.
Ovila Forget.
Shave Condos.
Robert S. Henries.

The car was owned by Samuel W Conant of Dudley and was operated by his chauffeur, Eugene Jackson, who was unable to give bail of $6,500 on charges of reckless and drunken driving. He is in Worcester county jail. Jackson was injured slightly.

Barry and Forget were killed instantly. Condos died shortly after reaching Worcester Hospital. Henries died of a fractured skull several hours after the crash.

Henries was the last of the tribe of Nitmuck Indians.

CARDINAL BONZANO GOES UNDER KNIFE

Rome, Nov. 19 (I.N.S.)—Cardinal Bonzano 66, former apostolic delegate to the United States, and papal legate to the Eucharistic Congress in Chicago last year, was operated on today for ulcers of the stomach.

"The operation itself was a complete success," Dr. Alessandri, famous surgeon, told International News Service.

HELEN MENKEN 'WEDDED TO ART'

New York, Nov. 19.—"No more husbands for me. From now on, I am wedded to my art," announced Helen Menken, actress, as she alighted from the Chicago train today.

She recently obtained a divorce in Chicago from her actor-husband, Humphrey Bogart, charging cruelty.

KAISER'S SISTER DANCER'S BRIDE

Bonn, Germany, Nov. 19 (A. P.)—After a somewhat exciting life, the ex-Kaiser's sister, Princess Victoria Schaumburg-Lippe, at 61, once more has landed in the haven of matrimony with a young Russian refugee Alexander Subkoff, one-time dishwasher, professional dancer and motion picture "extra."

The bridegroom, 27, reputedly of good family, but down and out since the Russian revolution, thus by reason of today's alliance will figure in the next edition of the Almanach de Gotha among the Prussian royalty as recipient of a grand-duchess or Queen Victoria of England and as brother-in-law of the former German Emperor.

The wedding, a civil marriage, surprised the public, led to expect it next week. Even Princess Victoria's chamberlain, Baron von Solemacher, was unaware of her sudden decision and was on a business errand when recalled to function as a witness.

It was announced today that a Greek Catholic marriage ceremony would be celebrated Nov. 21.

IRISH FREE STATE FACES NEW CRISIS

Dublin, Nov. 19 (I.N.S.)—Acute situation is developing in the Irish Free State, and forecasts were made tonight that next week may see either Eamon DeValera in power as a two months adjournment of the Dail Eireann.

President William Cosgrave's government has just passed through one crisis in the Dail, and is still face another in a few days when DeValera introduces a measure to have old age pensions restored to their former level.

The combination of the Laborites with De Valera's Republicans presents a powerful opposition to the government forces in the Dail. Should the old age pension measure pass, it is possible that Cosgrave and his government would resign, opening the way to a coalition Republican ministry headed by De Valera.

Don't Drug—Just Flush Out Poisons
With Mild, Harmless Salts
"It gets Tim 10 Past 40"
Most folks nearing middle life foolishly seem to think that they must resort to stimulating drugs when the kidneys feel the tinge of need. The back hurts or they suffer from sick, headache, dizzy spells, sallow skin, stomach and sometimes rheumatism. In reality all they need to relieve their troubles and feel "peppy" again is simply a thorough flushing out of the body poisons in a natural way.
There is one mild, easy, ideal method which has been found highly effective by thousands of people for years. You simply take a tablespoonful of JAD SALTS in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with dilithia. By helping to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys and neutralize acids in the system, the source of irritation is often entirely done away with and bladder disorders relieved as well. JAD SALTS is inexpensive, absolutely harmless, makes a delightful lithia water drink and may be obtained in four ounce size from any druggist.

100 GUN SALUTE TO HAIL SULTAN WITH BUT 1 WIFE

Boy of 17, Who Will Rule Morocco, May Dispense With a Harem

Fez, Morocco, Nov. 19 (A.P.)—Sidi Mulo. Hamada, newly elected 17-year old sultan of Morocco, is one of the best all-round sportsmen in Africa and a scion of the best educated men in the dark continent.

A salute of 100 guns will be fired in Hamada's honor when he makes his formal entry into Rabat, seat of the government under the French residency, probably Monday.

The boy is entitled to four wives under Mohammedan law, but so far he has only one.

He and his two elder brothers were married in a triple ceremony thirteen months ago today. Young Hamada took as his bride his first cousin a daughter of his father's brother.

Most of the youth's education has been imparted by French tutors and it is said he is so imbued with the European idea of monogamy that he may be satisfied with one wife. However, the ancient traditions of the royal harem will surround him.

From the Sultan's office four doors lead to apartments, each of which traditionally is reserved for one of the four wives.

Dusky Ones of the harem which the late Sultan left are likely to pine away in a palace to be provided for them. The government will support them.

The boy Sultan is an automobile fan and a horseman. He has several cars and, having a knack with machinery, spends a great deal of time tinkering with the motors.

He likes his horses wild and will not ride anything but a thoroughbred.

With the coming of the new Sultan all embryos of the old royal household will lose their jobs, for it is traditional to clean house with a change of rulers. Only the grand vizier, El Mokri, is likely to continue.

GEORGE REMUS, former noted lawyer and "bootleg king," in jail at Cincinnati. His trial for wife murder is marked by his temperamental outbreaks while acting as his own chief counsel

REMUS AT WORK ON DEFENSE PLAN

Cincinnati, O., Nov. 19 (A.P.)—Between granting interviews and refusing visitors, George Remus worked today on opening statement of how defense he planned to make next Monday in his murder trial for slaying his wife in Eden Park here last October 6.

Despite two very pointed warnings from Judge Chester R. Shook Remus, participant in six spectacular clash s with opposing counsel or solo outbursts in the five days of the trial, had no plan but to conduct case his own chief counsel.

Judge Shook told Remus that unless the defendant showed more ability in recognized court procedure he would not be permitted to continue as counsel. Yet, in granting the plea for a rule to govern restraint of former gang lawyers Count none.

It was pointed out that Remus was not participating as his own counsel through any legal status as an attorney, for he is a disbarred attorney.

Physical restraint could be imposed, however, it was pointed out and Charles P. Taft, II., prosecutor, said that if there were other outbursts he would demand that a bailiff be stationed on each side of Remus.

Mr. Taft the recipient of a physical threat from Remus, added he would be prepared for anything Mr. Remus might essay towards wrecking him physically.

FURS

One Year to Pay

Thirty-Five Years of Square Dealing with the Public

Not one customer can point their finger at us and say that we ever deceived them in the way of honest values for honest dollars.

CONFIDENCE NEEDED IN BUYING FURS

Confidence—it regulates the world; without it we would forever be in the state of chaos.

We have confidence in our banks and bankers. They protect your money and mine, we seek their advice and abide by it because of confidence. Confidence which has been proven by their deeds and actions. Millions upon millions of dollars have been entrusted to their care through our country's confidence, your confidence and mine. Certainly you need confidence in your furrier in the selection of a Fur Coat.

Every Success Is Based on Confidence

Confidence in your God, your church, your mother, father, husband, wife, children, neighbors and friends. Confidence in your car, the engineer, the aviator, the surgeon and the people who toil.

Confidence, faith in each other, and a clear conscience are the three attributes which guide the honest man to success.

PRICE

We do not press price, because we do not consider price alone means anything. We look through price to value as the wise method of buying.

It is possible to find furs lower priced than we dare recommend. But where the yard-stick is ultimate economy we concede prudence to no man. To know you will get satisfaction and protection is more important than to pay a few dollars less which may be offset in ways not apparent at the time of purchase.

Not a High Priced House

Ours is not a high priced house. It is not a low priced house. If by low prices is meant low grade, ours is a house which protects to the fullest extent every customer who favors us with a share of their patronage.

STORAGE

During our storage season we find hundreds of customers who have been sadly deceived in the purchase of a coat manufactured from burnt skins, and in many instances we find that after one season this class of coat is not worth the cost of repairing same. See us before you decide, for protection.

HUDSON SEAL

When a Hudson Seat, which is dyed muskrat, is offered for sale, how is the public going to know whether the coat is made from good, honest, selected skins, or from flats, throwouts, Canadians, burnt skins, etc., etc., etc.? They all look alike to the buyer. Even the shrewdest can easily be deceived. Therefore, we know much better than you that protection is very much needed when no little amount of hard earned money is being spent for the purchase of a fur coat. We offer you full protection in quality and price, and our interest in your coat never ceases during its life.

TURKEYS TO BRING 60 TO 80 CENTS A POUND

Cooler Weather Puts Touch of Holiday in Market Stalls

Advent of cooler weather has given great encouragement to Quincy Market poultry dealers, who have been reducing the price week to put on display to welcome the Thanksgiving trade. However the stalls began to assume their holiday appearance.

The price of turkeys will range about the same as last year, around 60 to 65 cents a pound for fresh western birds to 75 and 80 cents for choice native and northern New York stock. There are few Vermont turkeys anywhere.

Chickens, large, are priced at 65 cents, smaller ones selling at 60 to 65 cents the pound. Fresh killed ducklings are 55 to 60 cts., choice Rhode Island green geese 50 to 60 cents. Guinea chickens running two to two and a half pounds each are 45 the pair.

"FIXINS" ARE HIGH.

Wild game is not in so great variety as usual, the market men preferring to keep bear and moose in storage until the cold weather arrives. Venison, however, choice fat steaks being $1.25 a pound and other cuts ranging to as low as 60 cents. English partridge are 45 a pair.

The traditional "fixins" are rather high. Boston Market celery goes at 35 cents a bunch and lettuce as at 20 to 25 cents the pound. There are plenty of other Italian to tempt side dishes that are reasonably priced.

Chinese cabbage, which is becoming quite popular, sells at 15 cents a pound. Brussel sprouts at 40 cents a basket, cauliflower 25 cents a head, egg plant 25 to 35 cents each. Des Moines squash 15 cents a pound, endive 60 cents a pound, mushrooms 75 to $1 a pound, green beans 25 cents and peas in the pod 25 cents a pound, radishes 10 cents the bunch.

NEW STRAWBERRIES IN.

There were a few hot-house strawberries in the market but were not they were snapped up quickly at $1.25 a quart. French chestnuts are 70 cents a pound, fine Japanese persimmons 15 cents each, dell-ious apples extra large size 25 the dozen, bouquets, 35 cents a basket.

One of the few delicacies to always be called "vegetable buds" a kind of pickle imported from Sicily, island. The fancy ones are spinach and tomato and thyme, sell for 35 cents a bottle. Tiny pearl onions, a Holland specialty, are very attractive at 25 cents a bottle very small ears of corn put up in France, and to be eaten cold and all bring 35 cents a bottle.

Cold pack corn on the cob, brought from California, is offered at $1 a jar containing four large ears, but house cucumbers bring 25 to 50 cents each.

DESSERTS TEMPTING.

Tempting desserts are brandied mince meat at 75 cents a part $1.25 a quart; brandied peaches and cherries at $4 a quart, $2 a pint, plum fruits $1.25 to $2.25 the box, imported stuffed dates, 65 cents a package, wine jellies, mincemeat, celery, port and claret, in cherbet glasses are 65 cents the jar.

For those who prefer sea food there are fresh and just swimming to shore in the meat of 45 cents a pound; lobsters boiled are 50 cents the pound live, large, 65, and chicken lobsters 60 cents, large oysters sold at 90 cents a quart, small at 70 cents, 50 cents a quart, Cape scallops $1.60 a quart. White finny, those diminutive fish, too small to clean, which are served with oyster fried sauce and eaten "as is," and claimed to be one of the luxuries of the finny tribe, have made their seasonal appearance in the market.

'SELF-RUNNING' MOTOR TO LIGHT HUB AIR PORT

Demonstration of New Regenerating Machine to Be Given Next Tuesday Night

For the first time in its history, the Boston Airport will be illuminated this week.

In order that aviation enthusiasts may obtain an idea of how the Airport would look if properly lighted, a demonstration will be staged next Tuesday night, weather permitting.

Using the new "Self-Regenerating Motor," which its inventor claims runs without batteries or other outside aid, hooked up to eight floodlights, illumination will be furnished for the departure of the night air mail, according to the plan.

Between the falling of darkness and the takeoff of the air mail ship at 8:15 H. F. Billings, manager and chief pilot of the Boston Airport Corporation plans to take up and bring down a plane to demonstrate the advantages of the lights.

Major Malcolm E. Nichols, an aviation enthusiast, will be present with members of his aviation committee, together with a representative of the Governor, members of the Chamber of Commerce, Captain Horace N. Hansen of the U. S. Army Air Service in command of the Airport, representatives of the Colonial Air Transport, Inc., which has the mail contract, together with representatives of the postal service.

H. W. LAVIGNE, INVENTOR.

The demonstration will be staged by the owners and patentees of the motor, the American Automotive Corporation of New York, the general manager being William J. Coughlin of the Boston Athletic Association. Attorney John W. Murphy of Worcester is counsel for the company.

The lights are being furnished by Monroe R. Devere of No. 71 Brimmer street, Boston, and will be of 100 watts each.

Lights and motor will be taken to the airport before dark in order that the machine, the invention of Henry W. Lavigne, may be displayed.

It is claimed that this motor will function wherever motive power is used, and that its peculiar properties, particularly lack of fuel, make it an ideal means of propelling airplanes.

The sponsors of the "self-regenerating motor" assert that it can be constructed much lighter than a gasoline motor furnishing equal horsepower.

EXAMINED BY EXPERT.

Under construction by a local factory is a model motor which, it is expected, will be completed some time in December. When finished it is planned to place this model on the chassis of a sedan from which the engine has been removed and drive it across the continent without gas batteries or any outside aid.

Plans are also being discussed for construction of an airplane model.

Thornton F. Cheney, a radio engineer, connected with the Conacil dated Radio Lamp Company of Danvers, who examined the motor had no hesitancy in characterizing it as of vital significance to the electrical industry.

HENRY W. LAVIGNE, whose "self-regenerating motor" will be used in test to illuminate the East Boston Airport next Tuesday night.

N. E. States Gain in Industries and Number of Workers

RESULTS OF SURVEY ARE REPORTED BY COL. KNOX

Gain of 431 New Industries in 1926, Against Loss of 207, With Total Number of Employes Gained 19,054 as Against Loss of 8,056.

A FAVORITE old argument of persons seeking removal of New England industries to their localities on the ground that "New England industries are deserting the homes of their founders" was refuted by the report of the committee on public relations and community organization of the New England Council at the conference at Springfield last week.

The result of a survey of the industries of the six states, as reported by Colonel Frank Knox, publisher of the Hearst papers in Boston, chairman of the committee, shows that, instead of losing, New England states actually have gained, both in number of industries and number of employes. 'The report, in part, follows:

By C. L. FR, NK KNOX

IS New England gaining industrially, and if so, to what extent?

For the first time a definite answer can be given to that question, and the answer is:

"Yes, New England is gaining more industries and employing more people than she is losing, either through business failures or removal of industry elsewhere."

The task of an answer positively has permitted interested students of conditions of the country to create the impression that New England was losing heavily in both ways. This impression was strengthened as the fact that the loss of a few outstanding industries was widely advertised.

Decided Gain Shown

The committee, in an endeavor to learn the facts, got New England Industrial plans and losses, number took the first study ever made of the migration of industry to and from New England.

Replies to a questionnaire sent to 13 members of Committees and Boards of Trade in New England show that 192 communities gained 623 new industries in 1926, and lost only 207 industries in that period. The total number of employees in the industries gained is 19,054 and in those lost there were 8,056.

Of the 31 industries lost by New England communities in 1926, 87 are a business failures and 126 moved to other localities. Of the 126 that moved only eight went to points outside of New England. There were 23 industries that came from other sections to New England, one each coming from New Jersey and Ohio and the remainder coming from New York.

Forty of the 623 industries gained by the New England communities reporting in this survey are branch plants of industries located elsewhere, either in New England or outside, while the remainder came from other New England communities or were new industries started by local capital.

While not all communities report-

Gratifying

RESULT of survey as reported by Colonel Frank Knox (above) shows the industries of the six New England states have gained both in number of industries and number of employes.

ing were able to give a division of the gains and losses in labor as regards male and female, those that did so divide this labor showed that there were 2,514 male employes in the industries gained, as against 1,264 in those lost, and 4,180 female employes in those gained as against 1,218 in those lost.

The total population of the 197 communities is 6,40.,107, or more than half the total population of all New England.

While complete information as to the reasons for removal to or from New England was not forthcoming in all cases the following are given as typical reasons by those reporting:

For moving to New England: Labor troubles elsewhere, lower overhead and nearness to market and supply of raw materials in New England.

For moving from New England: Consolidation with companies located elsewhere and labor troubles in New England.

Reasons for removing to some other point in New England included labor troubles, market and supply, additional space, better opportunity, general trad conditions.

Analysis of Replies

A further analysis of the replies to this questionnaire shows that each New England state gained in the number of industries, and in only one state were there fewer employes in the industries gained than in those lost. An analysis of figures by states follows:

MASSACHUSETTS: Seventy-eight communities with a total population of 2,828,282, reported 285 new industries, and 155 lost, or a net gain of 130. There are 10,181 employes in the industries gained as against 3,990 in those lost, or a net gain of 6,191.

Outside Massachusetts

MAINE: Thirty-two communities with a total population of 346,187 reported 33 new industries and 10 lost, or a net gain of 23. There are 2,013 employes in the new industries as against 861 in those lost or a net gain of 1951.

NEW HAMPSHIRE: Thirty-one communities with a total population of 236,656 reported 29 new industries and 18 lost, or a net gain of two. There are 1,808 employes in the industries gained as against 1,156 in those lost, or a net gain of 122.

VERMONT: Twenty-one communities with a total population of 1 7 1 reported 20 new industries and four lost, or a net gain of 16. There are 335 employes in the industry gained as against 104 in those lost, or a net gain of 231.

RHODE ISLAND: Eight communities with a total population of 17 543 reported four new industries and three lost, or a net gain of one. There are 154 employes in the industries gained as against 613 in those lost, or a net loss of 457.

CONNECTICUT: Twenty-seven communities with a total population of 806,312 reported 69 new industries as against 17 lost, or a net gain of 52. There are 4514 employes in the industries gained as against 1771 in those lost, or a net gain of 3140.

New Bay State Plan to Remake Prisoners

REFORM SYSTEM OF PUNISHMENT TO BE TRIED OUT

New Colony in Charge of Harvard Man Has Been Started in Norfolk, Near Walpole

H. B. GILL EXPLAINS IDEA

All Will Be Given Chance to Grow and Become Useful Members of Society

MASSACHUSETTS, always in the forefront in prison reform has begun a new departure in handling prisoners.

In the little neck of the woods that seems remote from everywhere a new prison colony has been started. This is what formerly was known as "The Oval, a series of community buildings in Norfolk near Walpole. And here the prisoners is to be dealt with "as an individual."

Pennologists everywhere, although disagreeing on how prisoners should be dealt with, agree in one belief that the great defect in prison discipline is dealing with masses instead in groups. In the new Massachusetts State prison colony in Norfolk they will be dealt with, taught and developed as individuals.

H. B. Gill in Charge

Howard Bedding Gill, Harvard graduate who for two years has been in close touch with Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, has been taken over the superintendency of the new rooms and yesterday Mr. Gill said for the first time what he expects to accomplish.

"A man who is sent here from the State Prison in Charlestown may be sent for a brief term or a short one. Well give him a chance to grow so that as far as possible he will become a useful member of society.

"In the process of rehabilitating criminals, cases for mental, medical and social study of the inmates will be maintained. The best psychiatrists in the state will at times be consulted to determine if a prisoner became a crim out because of mental defect now. At the same time he will be checked up physically and his social and family history investigated.

"In the old days—not so long ago—men had their ears cropped off, their tongues snipped out, their eyes put out or they were hanged for various offences.

Prisoners Number 48

Men caught poaching were blinded. If he was taken as a first time to reform the system of punishments. We still are learning. We are progressing."

The prison colony of which Supt Gill has just taken charge is a reorganization of the state's old Hospital institutions. The state hospitals known as the Bridgewater home at Foxboro. Following the war it was used for rehabilitation of shell shocked veterans.

JESSE POMEROY REVEALS HEART IN LATEST POEM

"Sometime" Has Sad Significance in View of Futile Efforts of Famous "Lifer"

68TH BIRTHDAY NOV. 29

In Prison 52 Years, He Has Never Given Up "Hope Deferred" of Freedom

Sometime—how much that little word
Includes in faith—in hope deferred!"

Over the signature of "Grandpa," a poem with these lines appears in the last number of the "Mentor," monthly magazine published at the Massachusetts State Prison.

The author is Jesse Pomeroy, famous "lifer," who will celebrate his sixty-eighth birthday on November 29. It will be the fifty-second birthday he has celebrated in prison.

Jesse Pomeroy

Under his pen-name of "Grandpa," by which he is known in newspaper and penitentiary circles throughout the country, Pomeroy has contributed to the Mentor a five-stanza poem entitled "Sometime."

In view of his repeated efforts for freedom, formerly efforts at escape by ingenious methods, and of recent years through periodical appeals to the Governor of Massachusetts, the title of his poem has a sad significance.

No one knows better than Jesse Pomeroy the hope that springs eternal and the sickness of hope deferred.

The poem follows:

Sometime—a word not large, 'tis true,
And yet it may means much to you;
We often heard that word out loud,
And all it means, would make us proud;
No matter what the stage in life—
With young or old, the word is rife—
Sometime.

Sometime—how much that little word
Includes in faith, in hope deferred;
To hear what all would fain believe—
To see what we would fain achieve—
Can lighten hearts that heavy are—
Can make the eye flash like a star—
Sometime.

Sometime—we would forever miss
A chance to add to human bliss,
If we forget that little word,
In ev'ry land so often heard;
In use by learned, or the rude—
We cherish all it may include—
Sometime.

Sometime—mayhap it will come true,
As joy, or sorrow, it may brew;
In hope attained, or deed long past—
As destiny our lot may cast;
And to be faced, with cheerful mien—
That is its message, clearly seen,
Sometime.

Sometime—to boast or thoughtless vie
That little word, we often choose;
But what would life be without hope—
Uplifting as we're prone to mope;
Our longings may the brighter glow
The meaning of that word to know—
Sometime.

Pomeroy is well known among prison inmates as a poet and philosopher. During his long confinement, he has studied and written much, and has become proficient in seven languages.

He was born November 29, 1859.

It was on Sept. 7, 1876, that he was committed to the prison for murder then a boy of 16. He was at first sentenced to hang, but Governor [illegible] on the execution at that time fixed to seven months warning, and the sentence, Governor Rice commuted Pomeroy's sentence to solitary imprisonment for life.

For 40 years the "solitary" sentence was carried out. Then, during the administration of Governor Walsh it was mitigated and Pomeroy was permitted to attend chapel and to mingle with other prisoners.

He never has given up the "hope deferred" of gaining his freedom.

PROPOSED LINE WOULD TAP RICH WHEAT SECTION

Great Northern Railway Has Completed Plans to Serve Grain Area

The Great Northern Railway has completed plans for the construction of a line which will tap an area of nearly a million and a half acres of the finest wheat lands in the South west, according to a recent announcement.

The new line will extend 30 miles north and west from a point on the Rudyard branch of the railroad main line in Montana to the little hinterland town of Turner near the Canadian border. It will cost $2,000 to build. If the line are approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Montana commerce commission it is the ambition of the road to handle the 1928 grain crops of the district.

The new branch will farm all railway service to a great spring wheat country comprising a total of 61 townships which is now handicapped by inadequate railroad facilities.

The district north and west of Saco is one of the finest dry land farming districts in Montana. The soil is a rich loam, and farmers average 30 bushels to the acre. Yields as high as 38 bushels per acre are reported.

New Zealand's Railways Make Safety Record

"SAFETY FIRST" is a basic principle of New Zealand's State Railways service. The service has adopted the most progressive of safety devices in its train working, such as tablet-working, electric lock and block, automatic signalling and air brakes.

During the last financial year more than 24,000,000 separate rail journeys were made for all distances varying from a mile or two in the suburban areas to thousand trips of hundreds of miles, and not a single passenger was fatally injured.

"This year farmers of the territory that will be tapped are anticipating the opening of the line," said Mr. Albert. Many of them are said to have their grain on files or more. In addition to the incentive for small grain growing the section is well adapted for dairy farming.

More Tourists Visiting "Land of Evangeline"

LAST Summer the number of tourists entering Nova Scotia by rail and water increased 51 per cent over the year before, while the number of motorists increased 87 per cent.

Halifax, as Nova Scotia's greatest city, is the chief magnet for travelers. As the increasing influx overtaxed entertainment facilities, travel interests are now building the Lord Nelson Hotel at a cost of $1,250,000, some $300,000 of which is being put up by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Eastern Steamship Lines [illegible] additions now in adding 136 rooms and 12 new private baths to the present 100 rooms. WEEK'S TRADE NEWS MOSTLY FAVORABLE

Eyes Turn Tomorrow on Du Pont Directors, Who Act on Dividend

By FRANK H. MELOON,
Financial Editor.

Week's trade news has been mostly favorable.

The question is whether the market has been discounting too rapidly the business turn for the better. This week should supply the answer.

All eyes will turn tomorrow on the directors of the great E. I. du Pont de Nemours Company, who meet for dividend action.

Despite rumor to the contrary, the outlook is for declaration of the regular $3 a share and an extra as well.

A stock dividend? Later, perhaps. Du Pont owns a big block of General Motors and U. S. Steel. From time to time it has been reported vesting into everything from Allied Chemical to Amoskeag up in New Hampshire.

SHORTAGES IN MAKING.

Follows some of the interesting business and financial news of the week: Colonel Leonard Ayres economist of the Cleveland Trust Company a Boston visitor, foresees an end to slackening in the automobile and steel industries.

"Shortages are in the making in iron and steel and automobiles and railroad equipment. In these important lines production has fallen below normal consumption and there are no large stocks on hand from which consumption can be drawn. This means that before very long production must start up again, for buying demand is surely accumulating."

John J. Raskob, chairman of the finance committee of General Motors Corporation, predicts that 5,000,000 automobiles will be produced next year, compared with 3,500,000 this year, the re-entry of Ford accounting for the difference. Mr. Raskob says:

"Everything indicates that 1928 will witness the greatest prosperity our country has ever enjoyed. There is little, if any, inflation anywhere, as absolute control of acreage and farm purchasing power as the result of good crops and prices."

Professor Benjamin of Columbia, after working with a staff of twenty economists for fifteen months investigating installment selling, finds that it is sound practice, and says:

"Installment selling has increased production, stabilized output, reduced production cost and increased purchasing power. There is no limit to saturation point in progressive society, no limit to the volume of demand. If the possibilities of output are boundless, the possibilities of consumption are still more so."

PROSPERITY AHEAD.

James Simpson, president of Marshall Field & Co., sees great prosperity ahead.

Virgil Jordan, on the staff of the National Industrial Conference Board tells the Railway Manufacturers' Association:

"Conditions in the United States are favorable for an unprecedented expansion in business, which if it comes, is likely to strain our facilities and resources to the limit. There has been no real boom in this country since 1923."

The Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis, centre of the Spring wheat belt, announces:

"Bankclings during October of cash crops raised in this district were valued at $100,000,000, as compared with $53,000,000 in October, 1926. For the first three months of the present marketing season the incoming crops have brought $300,000,000 as compared with $150,000,000 in the corresponding period last year."

MARKET IS HIGH.

Standard Statistics Company reports regarding the industrial chemical industry:

"From present indications, the earnings of the leading companies of the chemical industry will, for the full year, exceed those of 1926 by at least 10 to 15 per cent, making a gain that will be matched by only a few of the other important trades."

Regarding the electrical equipment business, it says:

"Apparently sales of electrical equipment this year may not equal the dollar figures of 1926 owing to the lower price levels in force in numerous lines, but profit margins have been well sustained. From present indications of diversified lines will report further expansion in earning power this year."

Standard Statistics says:

"The market as a whole is sensitive to the level at which the September figures are published. At present level we should expect it to invite considerably more selling and profit-taking than at any time during the past fortnight."

'ANTI-DUMPING' IN RAYON CASE DROPPED

Treasury dropped without prejudice anti-dumping proceedings in connection with rayon imports from France and Italy. Present conditions, especially demand for rayon and exchange position of Italian lira, made a finding of dumping difficult. Department reserved right to reopen its investigation should circumstances warrant.

Churches Are Impressive Group in Crop of New Buildings

PERMANENCE AND BEAUTY OF DESIGN AMONG FEATURES

GREATER Boston builders have erected an imposing array of new churches. In point of cost and in their diversified beauty of design, these new edifices are important from a building standpoint. In the neighborhoods where they have been built they stand out as landmarks and enhance the communities they serve.

Their total cost runs up into many millions of dollars. Permanence of construction and modern ideas of design are their main features. The problems of church builders are different in many respects from those of other designers and contractors.

George F. Stuart of Woodbury & Stuart, church architects, in reviewing recent church construction pointed out some of the problems and features of this type of construction. He said:

"It is well to bear in mind that great expense is not necessary to give utility and beauty.

PROPER LOCATION.

"The first consideration in building is to secure the proper location and a lot that lends itself to the building problem.

"Gothic is the style that is most popular and adaptable to the modern church.

"Stone is the building material desired by practically all denominations, but where expense is a factor brick comes next.

"Hard on the list is a composite building of granite, brick and stucco on wood frame.

"One of the helps to economy and utility is the use of the modern 'concrete stone' for both the ornamental and useful trim in the modern church.

"The roof construction may be of heavy trussed wood with plank roof boards two inches in thickness and up.

"The hammer beam truss is the most adaptable to the modern church of large dimensions.

"Moulded plaster work is largely used for interior decoration in churches. With this material rich and beautiful effects can be obtained for the least cost, especially where repetition is wanted.

INTERIOR DECORATION.

"For interior wall decorations there are a number of prepared materials in paint or past forms that can be cheaply applied to produce any kind of stone, marble or stucco effect required by the decorator.

"One of the most popular effects is to mark the walls off into stone courses or three header work, and by means of tinting with the proper tints, realistic stone walls are produced. In a church with stone or brick exterior walls this treatment is entirely reasonable and in good form.

"Stone walls should always have an adequate air space in the inside, with a good plastered wall. This insures a dry interior, also one that can be heated properly.

"The plastered wall is easily decorated, as stated above.

"Rubber tiles are now made so realistic and beautiful that they are frequently used where a tolerable floor is required."

BUILDING DROP SEEN IN SURVEY

Reports of October Construction From 551 Cities Compiled by S. W. Straus

The record of new building construction dropped rather sharply in October according to data of that month reported to S. W. Straus & Co.

The total of building plans filed or permits issued in these places was $288,879,612, compared with $412,[illegible] in September a month ago [illegible] October a year ago.

[illegible] in the survey account for more than 80 per cent. of the entire urban population of the United States and are the major centers in all 48 states. [illegible] estimates of total building [illegible] projects.

The loss in October was much more severe than that sustained in any previous month in recent years and brought the activities of the industry about 13 per cent. under the level of 1926, save the survey.

A study of the October record is, however, more reassuring than might be indicated by the comparative total.

While it is true that the slowing down processes are general, the spectacular drop in October was due to a considerable extent to conditions in New York and Chicago. The former exhibited a loss in round numbers, amounting to $58,000,000, while Chicago's loss was $24,000,000.

Thus these two cities lost $82,000,000 out of the $134,000,000 of the entire group of 551 cities.

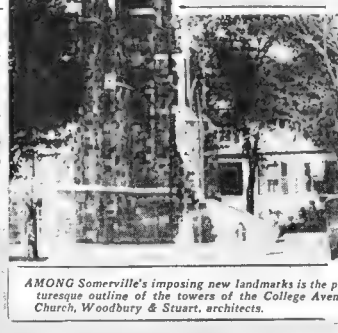
NOW IS TIME TO BUY A FARM, SAYS JARDINE

"I think this is the time for farmers to buy farms, and if they [illegible] own them, to hold farms," W. M. Jardine, Secretary of Agriculture stated recently. "Agriculture has been in despair for a number of years, but has begun to come out of it. It is improving and will continue to improve in coming years. Consequently it is an opportune moment for farmers, not speculators, to invest in farm real estate."



AMONG Somerville's imposing new landmarks is the picturesque outline of the towers of the College Avenue Church, Woodbury & Stuart, architects.

AMONG QUINCY'S new churches is the Atlantic M. E. Church which was recently dedicated. It is a granite structure, embodying modern ideas of construction, and is set back in the lot, with a spacious lawn in front.

Growing Neighborhoods

Hold Bright Future for Real Estate

"FOURTEEN minutes to Park street" means the fulfillment of a long awaited wish for residents of the Fields Corner section of Dorchester.

The new rapid transit spells for them, in addition to greater convenience of travel, stabler values for their real estate.

Many new neighborhoods now in the making on the fringe of Boston some day will come into a development similar to that Dorchester now enjoys.

Building records showing each month the preference of thousands for "a small home in the suburbs" forecast this.

Home-seekers now realizing their goal of a small home in the suburbs, come immediately into their first rewards. More freedom, independence, fresh air, community life are among them.

Later will come others, as pointed out by realty experts who advise, "Invest in a growing district."

With the growth of a community come better transportation and consequent higher real estate values, and then the suburban home-owner who may have been a pioneer in his day, sees his investment justified in dollars and cents.

COMPANIES LEASE IN AUTO DISTRICT

Arthur P. Pearce, Jr. reports that the Lancaster Tire & Rubber Company of Columbus, Ohio, has leased space on the first floor in the building at No. 1253 Boylston street, corner of Ipswich street, from Coleman and Gilbert Associates.

The Franklin Motor Car Company has leased to Thomas J. O'Brien space in the building at Nos. 618-626 Commonwealth avenue.

Mar ha Lee's Kitchen

All Thanksgiving Fixin's Are Now Fixed

If anyone happened into the Mar ha Lee kitchen with a nicely browned turkey under their arm, we could serve a mighty fine Thanksgiving dinner at a moment's notice thanks to the pre-holiday preparations we made all last week.

Minna's first masterpiece was a cream of oyster soup that somehow seems to just fit the bill as the opening item on a Thanksgiving menu.

Then on Tuesday the tantalizing odor of mince-meat caused an avalanche of water to gush from our mouths and gave our appetites a whetted sensation that I can't describe. I believe there's no better incitement than a dear one equation considering the mid-week meal.

For those of you who have not as yet prepared the important part of the Thanksgiving feast, I'll give the recipe here.

Three pounds meat, chopped one and one-half pounds beef suet, chopped, 6 pounds apples, chopped, three pounds raisins, seeded, two pounds currants, one pound citron, chopped fine, one half pint of lemon and orange one ounce cinnamon, ground, one half ounce cloves, one nutmeg grated, two pounds brown sugar, one quart boiled cider, one quart molasses, salt to taste. Cook all together two hours and seal in glass cans.

On Wednesday a gentleman who accompanied his wife to the afternoon demonstration waxed so enthusiastic over our Carrot Pudding that he voted for it as a dessert for today, as well as for the holiday dinner.

The pudding has the virtue of being rich enough to satisfy and a delicate menu yet not too heavy to lie on appetites already satiated to repletion. Here it is:

One cup raw carrots grated, one raw potato grated, one cup suet meats, one cup seeded raisins, one tablespoons butter, one teaspoon soda dissolved in two tablespoons cold water, one teaspoon cloves, one teaspoon cinnamon, one teaspoon nutmeg, one cup flour, one cup sugar. Mix dry ingredients, combine with the wet, steam one hour in buttered cups or in a mold, one and one-half hours. Two heat an egg improves this pudding.

With it may be served the traditional hard sauce made by creaming a quarter cup of butter with one cup of powdered sugar and flavoring with one tablespoon lemon extract and two-thirds teaspoon vanilla. Or the almost equally popular foamy sauce. The recipe calls for two egg whites, a cup of fine one cup of powdered sugar added gradually and beaten thoroughly. Last of all one-quarter cup of hot boiling and one teaspoon vanilla.

Candied sweet potatoes cooked in true Southern style. They require only a little more time and attention and are very attractive if one potato is thinly and scored lengthwise and diagonally, arranged in the centre of an oven glass baking dish and segments of sweet potatoes cut in pointed pieces radiating from it. The effect is gorgeous sunflower, and well worth the small amount of extra butter, honey and sugar sprinkled over the potatoes and they are baked three-quarters of an hour.

Pumpkin pie eliminated the mince-meat. The third course is to serve individual pumpkin pies with whipped cream. Or whipped cauliflower au gratin, easier to buy stuffed, real English plum pudding, cranberry frappe and stuffed olives. I had every dish and hour of consultation and hard work to select from.

Drop into the kitchen any time before the holiday if you want those recipes for use on Thursday—or perhaps you would like me to send you the entire menu with all hints for use at Christmas?

Market Notes and Some Prices

At the fruit stall, the price of grapes has risen. Bananas are still inexpensive and so are Mcintosh apples. Lemons and grapefruit are high. Chestnuts for the turkey stuffing are 15 to 25 cents a pound.

Vegetables are remarkably regular. Brussel sprouts, squash, cabbage, onions, potatoes and turnips are the economy items, all at 50 cents a pound, but cauliflower is rather poor.

Boston market celery is from 25 to 35 cents a bunch and cranberries are still in liberal supply.

Fresh mackerel is selling unusually late this season and had duck is again cheap after the little jump last week. Oysters are 40 cents and green shrimp 30 to 35 cents.

Meat prices show little change.

Color Scheme in a Canape

In many families canapes will replace the traditional cocktail or soup course on Thanksgiving Day this year. Here is a colorful canape, pimento, cheese and chive delicious to the taste, but reflects the holiday color scheme.

One-half cup cream cheese, 2 tbsps. cream, ¼ tsp salt, ½ tsp prepared mustard, 1 tbsp pimento (finely chopped), stuffed olives, crackers, strips of pimento.

Add cream to cheese and work until smooth. Add salt, prepared mustard and pimento. Spread on crisp unsweetened crackers, or round slices of bread soiled; garnish with the strips of pimento, and lay two of the stuffed olives on the serving plate.

Odor of Onions and Its Cure

ONION on the breath has done a lot to destroy social matrimony. Onion odor on the hands is an offense.

If you must dabble in onions here is a new way to remove any traces. Rub the hands well with a piece of celery, then wash with a strong solution of pure white soap.

Holiday Hints in the Kitchen This Week

Since the mind of every housewife is on preparations for the Thanksgiving Dinner Holiday Hints will be featured Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. On Friday we will demonstrate using up some of the left overs and on Saturday by request the ever-popular cup cakes and the tricky seven minute icing that seems to be the ambition and secret of every housemaker, novice or "experienced".

Here's the program:

Swiss Icing on Layer Cake

A BONNEVILLE member of the Martha Lee Women's Club, Mrs. M. J. Gabbard, of No. 16 Orchard street, has contributed her Favorite Layer Cake with Swiss Icing. As it appears it may puzzle others, but as a substitute for the too heavy Thanksgiving fruit cake, which to my mind is better served at the Thanksgiving supper. This layer cake is truly delicious and you may be sure your guests will want the recipe.

The Recipe for Layer Cake With Swiss Icing.—Two eggs (extra large) beat in slowly 1 cup of sugar 1 cup pastry flour 1 teaspoon of Tree Rose one cup flavor with vanilla, 1 cup boiling milk added last, in which a tablespoon has been melted.

Swiss Icing Recipe—One-half cup melted butter creamed with 2 heaping cups of confectioner's sugar 4 tbsps cream top of boiling water, add 2 egg yolks, 2 cups pastry flour 1 teaspoon baking powder and one teaspoon vanilla. Beat till it looks like whipped cream. Bake this in 9 inch cake pie plates in a hot oven 10 minutes and when cold spread icing between and on top. Cut in 1 to 4 squares bittersweet chocolate and when cool pour over icing.

Little Bits of Leaven

Housekeeping in the Garden of Eden may have been a little different, but at least Eve never had to hear from Adam about the cakes Mother used to bake.

Some women say they use cake flour only for company cakes. That's why so many husbands love home. Make your husband your best company.

Follow the rule. Everyone knows the woman who bakes the "good" cakes. Let her be the one to whom you go for help.

Keep your cake tester out of the breadboard slicht. It makes too good a pie cleaner.

Never forget to put wax paper on Angel Pan your cake is sure to fall down on you.

Another When you put your cake pan in the middle I can the burner oft, feed it to the child next door. Use the cake and the company doesn't know the difference."

Sweet Potato Surprise

Sweet potato surprise is just what the name implies.

Two cups riced sweet potatoes (boil three medium sized).
Dash of pepper.
One egg, beaten.
One half teaspoon salt.
Eight marshmallows.
One-half crushed cornflakes for sranfiakes).

Boil and peel potatoes, put through ricer. When partly cool, add egg, salt and pepper. If mixture is too dry, add a little milk. Flour hands if necessary. Form in 8 round balls with marshmallow hidden inside. Roll in breadflakes or cornflakes. Fry in hot fat (375 degrees F. or when a small piece of bread browns in 40 seconds. Fry until brown, drain on soft paper.

This Is Called Marvel Cake

Cream ¼ cup butter with 1½ cups powdered sugar, add alternately a little at a time, ½ cup milk and 2 cups pastry flour, with which 2 level teaspoons baking powder has been sifted. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla. Lastly fold in 6 beaten egg whites. Bake in 2 buttered layer tins in moderate oven (350 degrees) 30 minutes.

Filling and icing: Boil 1¼ cups water until syrup spins a thread (238 degrees). Add slowly to 2 beaten egg whites, beating continually until cool. Add 1-3 cup maraschino raisins cut in pieces, ½ cup shaved pecans, 1-2 cup chopped figs and 1-3 teaspoon vanilla. Spread between layers and on top and sides of cake.

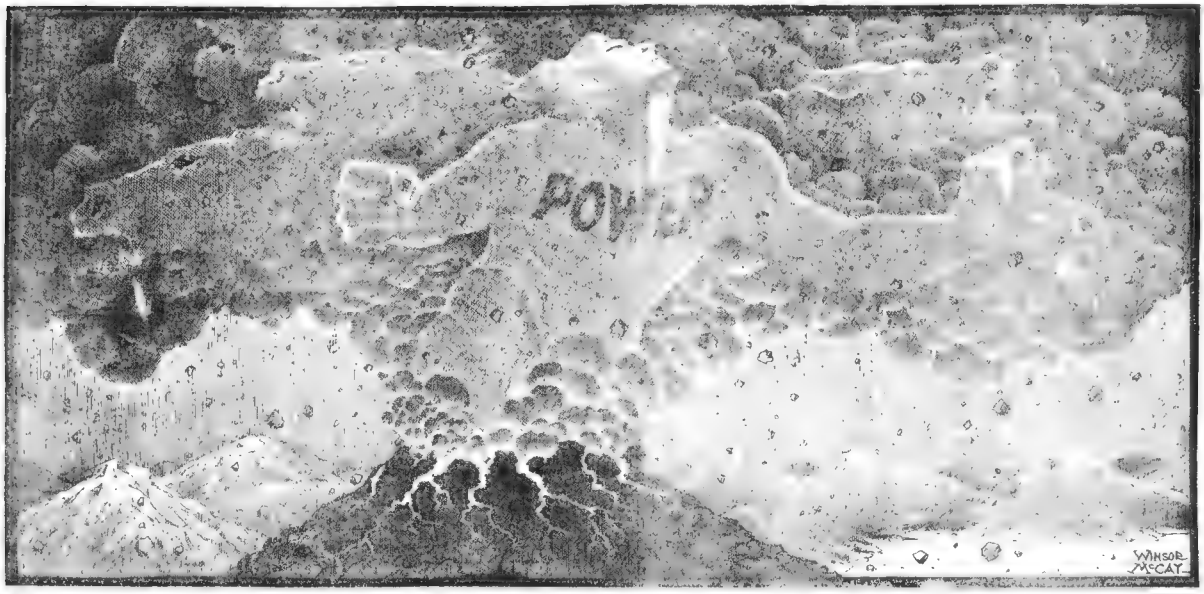
POWER—THE MAGIC WORD



MR. M'CAY chooses for his strong cartoon illustrating power, the fearful strength of a volcano.

The earth below, like the sky above, is all power.

The power of fire is in the earth, and the power of electricity to which the compass responds and the gigantic power of fertility by which our race lives.

Power is EVERYWHERE, from the first effort of a new born child lifting its hands in the cradle to the crash of thunder overhead.

We live in power and depend on power—mental, physical, financial, scientific, religious—for all that we accomplish

The Bible tells you that faith will move a mountain. We know and have seen it proved that science will cut through the thin waist of a continent and unite two oceans.

Since we cannot do anything or be anything without power, it is worth while to devote fifteen minutes this Sunday to the meaning of power and its many kinds.

Emerson said, "Great men are they who see that spiritual is stronger than any material force, that thoughts rule the world."

One of the greatest human engines that ever governed ruled IT, apparently, by the power of armies and of death, but in reality with his BRAIN. That man was Napoleon Bonaparte, who said: "Even in war, moral power is to physical as three parts out of four.

Long ago, before men had guns or flying machines, Ovid wrote, "the wild boar is often held by a small dog." A wild boar has ten times the power of a small dog, but the small dog, in his humble way, THINKS, seizes the wild boar by the ear, and BIG power is held by what seems little power, plus intelligence.

Every small boy has read that "we can make our lives sublime." But little boys or grown men cannot do it merely by wishing or by studying the lives of great men that "remind us."

Burke said, "I know of nothing sublime which isn't some modification of power."

Power FIRST, fame, wealth, glory, opportunity, peace of mind, independence, usefulness—ALL come after.

The sources and kinds of power are as numerous as blades of grass in a big field, or grains of sand on a wide beach.

CONCENTRATION is power. It puts all the energy you have on ONE spot

COMMON SENSE is power, for it enables you to distinguish between what is worth while and not worth while, what is possible and NOT possible.

Emerson said, "Power obeys reality and disappearances; power is according to quality and not quantity."

Real power works for good.

Noah Webster said, and he was mistaken [illegible] right, weakness always wrong; power is always insolent and despotic. The noise and bluster that SIMULATE power may be insolent and despotic.

But POWER, REAL and lasting, is based on wisdom, and wisdom is based on justice always.

The greatest orator that ever lived, Demosthenes, said, "It is not possible to found lasting power upon injustice, perjury [illegible] chery." Ten thousand political orators in 1928 will be trying to make noise do the work of power throughout the nation, and making a miserable failure of it. Noise is never power and injustice is never power.

There is a power that women especially possess noiselessly ruling.

Madame de Maintenon, the French governess whom the great King Louis the Fourteenth married when she was already an old woman, said, "The height of power in a woman, as far as matters are concerned, rests in tranquillity."

TRANQUILLITY was her power. The old King who knew the kind of life he had led and worried about the hereafter, in spite of much reassurance, was attracted by the tranquillity, spiritual, mental and physical, of the clever Madame de Maintenon and married her.

Man must be what he is. To pretend tranquillity when you don't possess it doesn't increase power.

But you will notice that the great Pacific, bending thousands of miles around the earth, from California to the Far East, is infinitely more tranquil than some little brook bustling down the hillside to join the ocean.

"How art thou fallen from Heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning?" The answer to Isaiah's question is written most beautifully in Milton's description of the great angel's fall

To use the power we have, content to make the best possible use of it while striving properly for greater power, not enviously or meanly or in jealousy of that which excels is the secret of success through power

If your plans demand use of the power [illegible] ney, concentrate on wise economy. If the demand power locked up in a certain knowledge, concentrate on getting and using such knowledge.

Goethe, great German, third among the greatest writers of the world, did not always take the wise advice that he gave, "beware [illegible] your powers; strive constantly [illegible] centrate them. Genius thinks it can [illegible] ever it sees others do, but it is sure to [illegible] every ill-indered outlay

The history of half-way success is a history of power "dissipated," wasted, like milk spilled upon the ground

Coleridge is an instance of such waste. Read Hazlitt's Essay on Coleridge and his description of the brilliant poet that would interrupt any work, however important, to amaze some person of no consequence

There is power [illegible] DISTANCE, as all [illegible] in the rocky cliff that has held back the [illegible] a hundred thousand years. And there is power in speed. A soft tallow candle that would break between your thumb and finger will go through a thick oak board fired from a rifle

Power, as Mr. McCay and the rest of us imagine it, is a great volcano, a Niagara, something BIG.

> The world is built ON power, and built BY power.
> Power of the mind.
> Power of law.
> Power of habit.
> Power of roaring volcanoes, restless tides, rushing hurricanes, flashing lightning, tumbling waterfalls.
> We live in a world of power, ruled by power.
> Unhappy he that LACKS power.

There is a power inconceivably great hidden from our eyes by its smallness—the power of thought, without shape or size, or the power locked up in atoms, particles of matter so small that a million, more or less, in one corner of your eye, would not disturb you

The [illegible] electrons that make up the atom, revolving around their central nucleus, as planets revolve around the sun, is altogether beyond man's imagination. Even scientists, accustomed to big figures, are amazed at the fact that such electrons, below microscopic vision, revolve in their fixed journeys not thousands or millions, but TRILLIONS of times in a SECOND

Power, [illegible] acquired, justly used, means the great[illegible] know

Unjustly [illegible] means destruction and ruin [illegible] rebellious angels from Heaven

We [illegible] earth we stand [illegible]

Consider [illegible] miles round, floating [illegible] a million times [illegible]

[illegible] daily 1,000 miles an [illegible] sun more than [illegible] that journey, [illegible] million years. [illegible] on through [illegible]

[illegible] is tremendous power there, and fortunate are [illegible] cannot [illegible]

Consider our sun, one of the smaller stars, a million [illegible] use that the tele[illegible]

Professor Meyer, astronomer of the University of California, says the sun sends out into space "4,200,000 [illegible]

'United States Army Saved Allies from Utter Defeat; St. Mihiel Doomed by Strategy of General Pershing'

'U. S. ACHIEVEMENT A TREMENDOUS FEAT'

"German Offensive Did Not Foresee How Huge Fighting Force Would Be Poured Into France So Speedily"

By GENERAL ERICH LUDENDORFF,

Chief Strategist of All the German Armies During the Latter Part of the World War.

SPEAKING of "soldier," I am employing the word in the widest meaning of what the term implies. To me, "soldier" does not only mean the combatant under fire, but also the officers in command, and those into whose hands the whole war organization is entrusted.

After the World War in Germany as well as in foreign countries I was reproached time and again, for having misjudged, from a military point of view, the importance of America's entrance into the war.

I was taken to task for having underestimated America's inherent capacity, not only in regard to the organization and the commissariat of a great army, but also in reference to military potentialities in general; that is, that I had underrated the opponent from every angle.

All this is incorrect!

I have heretofore explained that, soon after taking over the Supreme Command, around the end of August, 1916, I came to the conclusion that the Government of the United States would abandon its biased attitude, which it had assumed from the beginning of hostilities, and actually enter the fray when military victory seemed within the grasp of the Central Powers.

"German General Staff Data"

This conception, alone, forced me, as a means of preparation for the future, to study, at an early date, the American Army and its possibilities for development into an efficient instrument of war.

After America entered the war I continued these studies very painstakingly, on the basis of all obtainable information, observations and impressions. Data thus gained were compiled by the German General Staff, from time to time, in the form of memorials.

GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING, Commander-in-Chief of the A. E. F.

Even today, I still hold on to the opinions and conclusions which were arrived at during the war and I find, in view of what I have read since then, that these convictions were absolutely correct. In this article, I intend to portray the American Soldier, as I saw him during the World War, leaving it to the judgment of the world to decide whether I saw rightly.

First of all, I should like to say a word about the achievements of the American Army, in reference to organization and commissariat.

At the time of America's entrance into the World War, in Spring, 1917, the German General Staff estimated the strength of the regular United States Army to be about 130,000 men, while the strength of the militia was held to be somewhat less in man power.

Nucleus for Big Army

Although the military strength of the National Guard was not considered formidable, we were under the impression that the complications with Mexico at that time were utilized as a veil behind which the Regular Army was made ready, as a nucleus for a big National Army along the lines of the Swiss Military System.

FOUR SHOTS, EACH A BULLSEYE—The American mobile railroad gun in the picture was stationed at Barley-court on the Western Front in 1918 and was firing 1200-pound shells at the headquarters of a German Army Corps nineteen miles distant. This 13-inch gun was manned by men of the Thirty-fifth Coast Artillery and the aerial observer reported that each projectile struck its target.

We naturally expected a thorough reorganization and a considerable re-enforcement of the American Army. This, of course, would require some time. There was sufficient manpower available in the United States, and even the question of equipment did not seem to present any great obstacles, inasmuch as the American war industry, at that time, was highly developed.

The main difficulty I perceived lay in the lack of trained personnel, for which only the Regular Army could be drawn upon. Also formation and co-operation of greater military units, known to the American Army in peace time only upon paper, would take time.

I assumed that the formation of military units would be accomplished in American concentration camps before the soldiers embarked for Europe, while the actual war training would be undertaken in France, behind the front and along quieter sectors of it.

In general this assumption of mine was correct. From America's official entrance into the war until American divisions actually partook in hostilities, it took fully fourteen months, despite the now known fact that preparations for war had already begun as early as 1915.

"What We Expected"

Our general staff had expected that for the formation, equipment and training of bigger army units, about ten months would be necessary. Therefore, we were of the opinion that until the Winter of 1917-18 no American units of any great number would put in their appearance on the European theatre of war, which we primarily considered to be France.

To be sure, we realized the possibility that the Government of the United States, as a tentative formation, and for political reasons, might dispatch, as early as the Summer of 1917, a weak expeditionary corps of about one or two divisions. We also expected that around this time officers and special units would arrive in France, as a sort of advance guard.

At the end of July, 1917, it became possible to draw more definite conclusions. The arrival of General Pershing in France, which had become known to us, seemed to point to the fact that, right from the start, as regarded formation, training and equipment, close co-operation of the American Army with the Supreme Command of the Allies would be stressed.

We also knew that, aside from the Regular Army and Militia, a new National Army was being assembled by draft the United States Army, whose first units, however, could not be ready before the beginning of 1918. Apparently, one division of the Regular Army had already arrived in France, but, lacking training, was still in concentration camps preparatory to assignment to quieter sectors of the front.

The Entente did not seem to have received any promise of an especially strong and early support by fliers.

Around the end of 1917, we figured that the number of American soldiers shipped to France, up to that time, amounted to 75,000 men. As we know today, already 160,000 men or more had arrived at that time on the European Continent. Until Spring, 1918 we expected that, at the most, fifteen American divisions would arrive—an estimate which proved too high when later compared with actual figures.

GENERAL PEYTON C. MARCH, Chief of Staff of the United States Army in the World War.

A Tremendous Achievement

On the eve of the great battle in France which commenced on March 21, there were only seven American divisions on French soil. Of these only the first could be counted upon as a combat unit, while three others had entered the front lines for [illegible] instructions, and the remainder were still in training behind the front.

The gradual increase, from month to month, of American Army transports was due to imminent German successes. Thus, in the second half of July, [illegible] more than one million American soldiers on French soil, and at the time of the armistice two million.

I admit that the German General Staff did not perceive, right from the start, the speed and full scope of this tremendous American achievement.

This, to a certain extent, must be blamed on overrating the effect of the intensified U-boat campaign, which, as far as the [illegible] merchant marine was concerned, proved continuously effective, but, nevertheless, disappointing in regard to obstructing the American army transports.

Of course, it was beyond my imagination to conceive what rigorous and unfair means would be resorted to by the Entente for the purpose of acquiring bottoms necessary for facilitating the tremendous increase of American troop transports.

It may be pointed out here that the Entente—professing to fight for the rights of the small nations—violated the rights of neutral states, especially Holland.

I did not know to what extent American troops would be equipped by the Entente with war material, after having arrived on the European Continent. When such a procedure was resorted to, it became possible to transport a great many more men on each steamer. Around the beginning of July every doubt in reference to the rapidity of American transports had vanished from my mind.

America, with great skill and energy, surmounted the tremendous difficulties presenting themselves in regard to the equipment and commissariat of an army of a million men, although sight must not be lost of the fact that French assistance proved of great value to her.

It should be mentioned here that a large number of American factories, manufacturing war material [illegible] before the entrance of America into the war, had moved their entire plants to Europe, continually supplying the Entente Powers with enormous quantities.

'OFFENSIVE IN ARGONNE CLEVER CAMOUFLAGE'

"Attack of the A. E. F. There Was Effectively Based Upon the Vital Element of Surprise

"The Lion's Share of Praise"

It seems to me that the lion's share of praise, in reference to achievements of America's organization, does not belong so much to the pacifically inclined Secretary of War Baker as to Generals Pershing and Peyton C. March. I believe that it is to the latter's credit that in the Spring of 1918 there was a decided change in the ratio of troop transports and that the all important question of bottoms was efficiently regulated.

In this connection, the practical sense of the American in all matters of organization and their inherent technical gifts proved valuable for them. I must not overlook to point out that the imposing figures mentioned before are subject to essential reductions, if a correct picture of their influence on the ultimate developments of the European land campaign is to be arrived at.

To ascertain the number of the actual combatant troops we will first have to deduct, in accordance with American figures, forty per cent of the men as non-combatants.

Marshal Foch, on July 1st, 1918, estimated the number of American troops, [illegible] in the Allied armies, to be 150,000 men, which is about one-half of all the American troops that had arrived on the European continent up to that time.

"U. S. Saved Allies"

Other reductions to be made consist of the comparatively high field losses which, in the Meuse-Argonne battle alone, from September 26 to November 11, amounted to 148,000 men.

Losses due to influenza and dysentery also made great inroads in the ranks of the

"HOW BRITAIN IS STRIDING FORWARD IN AIR"—GEN. MITCHELL

"Many 'Moth' Planes Are Used Like Flivvers for Pleasure and Business Flying in England."

By GEN. WILLIAM MITCHELL,

Former Assistant Chief of the U. S. Army Air Service and Commander of the U. S. Air Forces in Europe During the World War

LONDON, November, 1927.

WHENEVER I return to England and meet my old friends and companions in the Royal Air Force, I am impressed with the solid progress that they continue to make in aviation. Not that their ideas, from a technical standpoint or a tactical standpoint, are brilliant, but their general conception about the use of air power all over the world is splendid, and what air force they have is always ready to act at once.

Air Marshal Trenchard, commanding the British Air Force, is not only one of the greatest airmen that the world has produced, but is one of the outstanding figures of the war, whether on land or sea or air.

When I first went to Europe in 1917 I spent many days with General Trenchard's air forces, operating on the western front. Many of the systems and methods of aerial warfare used by the British were taken directly into our own organizations, as well as their methods of training pilots and ways of landing supplies and replacements.

FIVE little one-man "Moth" planes flying over England, where these flivver aircraft are used by many like autos for traveling about the country.

The British Air Forces contained a great many Americans during the war; in fact when the war ended about 65 per cent. of all pilots serving in British air squadrons on the front were Americans. The British were amazed when the first to learn that an air force's work is entirely separate from that of an army or navy, and in 1917 they created a separate ministry for the handling of all their air power. They were done because their army and navy were entirely unable to stop the German air raids over London, and the people demanded protection.

When their air force was under the army and navy, the Army Air Service would pursue the German planes as far as the coast, when the Naval Air Service was supposed to take up the chase, but it was never there. As soon as the United Air Service was formed the German air raids lost their force.

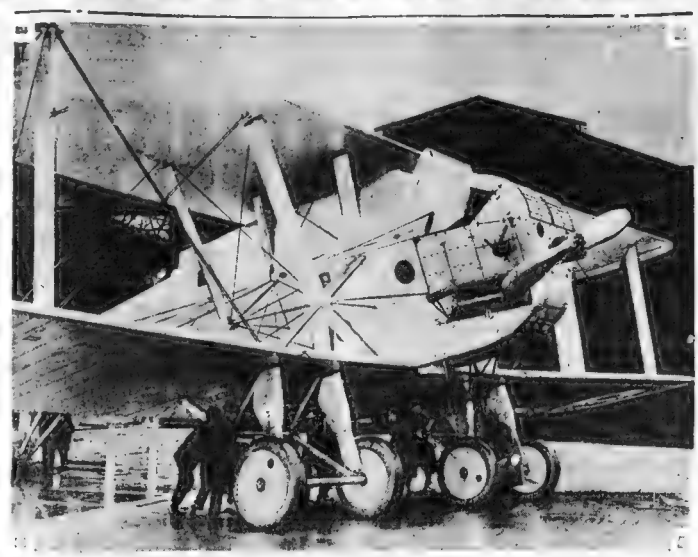
Great Britain now has about 800 military airplanes in England. They have a great many different types. Instead of equipping all of their pursuit aviation with one kind of plane, and all their bombardment with another, they have tried five or six different kinds, with a view to developing the best type, so that if they see a war coming they can go into production with the kind they have found the best.

At this time they have the fastest two-seater service airplane in the world. It makes 150 miles an hour at a low altitude with all its equipment, and 160 miles an hour at 10,000 feet. They have single-seaters with four guns and a speed of around 200 miles an hour.

Their bombers have been very much improved and are able to carry 4,000 pounds of bombs 1,000 miles without landing. They are also working on large airplanes, but have projected none as large as those in Germany or Italy.

The question of defending England from the air is of vital importance. They are no longer afraid of an invasion over the water, because their aircraft can sink any ships that attempt to cross the English Channel. If ships cannot cross the Channel, an army cannot land in England.

But London is only forty-five minutes' flight from the Continent of Europe, and if the enemy should hold the Channel ports, or Brittany, Belgium or Holland, or even southern Germany, all of the vital centers of England can be reached within a couple of hours' flight.



ONE of Britain's latest and biggest military bombing planes, which have 1,000-horsepower engines and can carry 4,000 pounds of explosives.

Air Torpedo Menace

During the war airplanes could carry only very small bombs at that distance, but now not only bombs of one or two tons can be conveyed, but the air torpedo may be fired from any place on the Continent within 20 or 400 miles of England, and hit London, Birmingham, Manchester, Liverpool or any other great center.

England keeps only about six weeks' supply of food on hand, and as she does not raise sufficient food on the islands to feed her people, she is wholly dependent on her overseas shipping for this.

As modern airplanes can fly around England and attack her shipping, no matter where it is, and destroy it, it is essential that England hold and keep control of the air. Once this is lost, she would be starved out in a short time.

The English have worked hard on ground defense against aircraft with machine guns, cannon, balloons, nets and curtains, and all sorts of listening devices and means of detecting approaching airplanes.

But in these days when airplanes can put mufflers on their engines, making them as quiet as automobile engines and can equip them with slow moving propellors that are practically noiseless, it is very difficult to hear them from the ground, and impossible to locate them at night or in fog.

With modern instruments, airplanes are now able to fly through quite heavy fogs and storms. Everyone in Europe knows that anti-craft defense from the ground cannot protect a country from air attack.

The English, however, have done a very sensible thing; every kind of a defense against aircraft, whether it be cannon or guns on the ground, or aircraft in the air, is handled by the Air Force, not by the Army and Navy. In this way, airmen who understand the tactics and strategy of aircraft have control of this vital matter.

Air Force Controls

The Air Force in England has control of and is charged with the responsibility for all air defense, and if England is attacked, the movements of the Army and Navy will be secondary to the aerial operations; in other words, the commander of the Air Force will direct what the Army and Navy shall do.

The Navy's jurisdiction does not begin until they go 100 miles off shore; and the Army does not assume jurisdiction over operations until a hostile army lands in Great Britain.

"Airplane Routes Through Far-Flung British Possessions Now Guard Peace of Empire."

The Air Force is the first line of defense of Great Britain and is the most important single element in their whole scheme of protection. That is what should be done in the United States.

Guarding Entire Empire

In a future war the air power will control the shipping lines. While submarines may be able to sink shipping, battleships and cruisers will be scant protection, because the air forces of any great power at war with England can sink any surface vessels quite easily.

Unlike Germany or Russia, which are essentially continental powers, England is a maritime power. Her sea lanes go from Great Britain to the Strait of Gibraltar and, by way of Malta in the Mediterranean, through the Suez Canal to India, the Straits Settlements, Singapore, China, Australia and Canada.

She has a line of fortified naval bases all along this route, but now she must put in a system of air bases, and as this air route has to cross many foreign countries it is going to be difficult to control.

One important function of the Royal Air Force of Great Britain is the study of and providing for not only a defense of the British Isles from the air, but also the general defense of the whole empire. Fortunately for Great Britain, there is a war college which is composed of officers from the air force, the army and navy.

The three branches—air, land and water—have equal representation. In this way the whole matter of defence can be discussed on a merits, as distinguished from the obsolete system such as used in the United States, where the army has one war college, the navy another, and there is practically no air force at all.

The British air force administers the territory of Iraq entirely, as do the Philippine Islands were administered by the United States Army in the old days before civil government was instituted. In Iraq, an air force officer commands all troops. What details of the army are necessary there, or local guards and police, report to the air force commander. So do any naval detachments.

Transportation is difficult in the valleys of the Euphrates and Tigris rivers, and troops mounted on horses or camels would take a very long time to get anywhere to meet and quell disturbances. Aircraft, however, can fly at the rate of 100 miles an hour, and can carry troops in airplanes sufficient to deal with any disturbance that may arise.

What is usually done in case of an uprising against the government is to send a couple of airplanes to the district affected. These drop messages to the chiefs telling them that if they do not come in and present themselves at a certain time, they will be attacked, and their town, dwellings and their flocks and herds killed.

This system enables the British to handle in a great territory at a minimum of expense. It costs much less to administer an inaccessible possession of this kind with an air force than with an army.

300 Planes in India

India has an air force of about three hundred planes. Units are stationed in Burma and an air base is being built at Singapore.

Already British air liners are flying to various places on the continent of Europe, and from Egypt through Syria to Baghdad and Iraq. Civil air lines will be started in the other colonies and dependencies before long. The large airships of the Zeppelin pattern are being built in England and should be ready to fly next year.

Air Marshal Sir Sefton Brancker is in charge of British civil aviation. He is a man of war experience in all air matters, and have known him for many years and on my recent visit to Great Britain I had a good talk with him about his projects for the future. He is very much interested in the airway from England through Africa to Capetown in Cape Colony at the southern tip of the continent.

The "Moth" Plane

This is now well organized, and whenever traffic warrants it air liners can be placed in service, which will give a steady air traffic for the 9,000 miles between London and Capetown. At present it would cost about fifty or sixty cents a passenger mile to operate such a line and with the present available traffic this is not warranted.

I had a most interesting afternoon at the De Havilland airplane factory and flying field. This company recently has produced a small airplane, called the "Moth." It is an excellent two-place flying machine. Its wings fold back alongside of the body and it can be wheeled by one person into a little hangar, not any bigger than the ordinary garage. I saw many of them standing in their little garages on the flying field.

These airplanes cost about $3,500 and the company guarantees them against all failures and keeps up all repairs on them for one year.

I saw at least ten or fifteen of these planes in use by their owners, some of whom were women. I was astonished to see one woman pulling her own airplane out of the little hangar by the tail, thanking it up, then getting in and flying off with it.

The number of people hurt in these planes has been practically nothing.

Anti-Falling Devices

After looking over the various De Havland constructions, including their three-engine airplanes of about 1,400 horsepower which are now carrying passengers between Cairo and Bagdad, I went over to see our old friend, Mr. Handley Page, who built the great bombers we used during the war. He still maintains a large factory.

He showed me his very interesting device for preventing airplanes from stalling and falling quickly to the ground. It consists of a hinged segment of the wing, both at the leading edge at the front of the plane and the trailing edge at the back. The theory is that when the airplane begins to lose speed, making it fall, these edges are extended instantly and automatically, so as to make the wing very much bigger, with more surface, and therefore better able to support the load.

There is another device to prevent falling, which they say is beginning to use. It is an instrument which, when the air pressure drops against the side of the plane due to its losing speed, releases a spring that pushes the controls forward and makes the airplane point its nose down, so as to pick up speed.

'U.S. Surmounted Tremendous Difficulties Sending A.E.F. to France'—Ludendorff

American Army, the number of hospital casualties and missing having been around 75,000.

Doubtless the best conception of the strength of the American contingents troops on European soil, around the end of hostilities, may be derived from the number of divisions then in France; namely, forty-three altogether.

Of these, only two-thirds—that is, twenty-eight divisions—actually partook of battles along the front, or served as reserves. Six additional divisions were still in the process of training along quieter sectors of the front, while another six divisions acted as depot troops, and three were quarantined or employed for special purposes in the rear.

The total head strength of the forty-three American divisions amounted to 1,100,000 men, with twenty-eight combatant divisions numbering 780,000 men. These facts must be borne in mind, inasmuch as, on the strength of them, greatly exaggerated figures spread by propaganda—are reduced to their correct size.

An Unknown Pershing

The actual strength of the American expeditionary forces was entirely sufficient to supply Germany's enemies with tremendous and continuously growing reinforcements.

On account of the timely assistance rendered by America to the Entente nations, the latter were not only saved from utter defeat, but also enabled eventually to gain military ascendency.

This military superiority, however, in spite of what has been reiterated so often, did not prove the war-deciding factor which ultimately forced Germany into unconditional surrender. Rather it was the result of its collapse on the German home front.

That the operations of our field army had not been broken manifests itself in the unbiased testimony of expert critics within the ranks of our one time opponents.

In addition, it was also seen that at the conclusion of hostilities the offensive strength of the armies allied against us had suffered greatly, and that the conditions of their reserves and reinforcements were such that the execution of far-reaching operations would only have been possible after extensive period of rest.

The question now arises, How did I judge the inherent quality of the quantitatively enormous American instrument of war?

First, I will discuss the generalship.

General Pershing, their supreme commander, was almost completely unknown to us. We only knew of him that in his youth, after returning from the Manchurian war, he had been promoted from captain to brigadier general, and as such had played a leading part in the Mexican campaign.

We did not doubt that he had followed military developments in the World War with intense interest, and that, especially since his arrival at the European theatre of war, he had endeavored to put the finishing touch to his theoretical knowledge of modern warfare.

However, as far as the task of an army leader under conditions as they prevailed during the World War was concerned, General Pershing actually lacked practical training.

This was little to be regretted as all the other American generals who held superior positions during the war and subject to the American General Staff.

In view of the above, I believed that I would not be obliged to cope with an indepedently operating American army unit leadership, and the strategic army as well, had made extensive practical experiences along quieter sectors of the front. This deduction proved correct.

A Foregone Conclusion

It is also known what difficulties General Pershing had to overcome to induce the Supreme Command of the Entente to consent to the organization of his troops into one exclusively American army, to operate under his supreme command.

Not before September, 1918, did General Pershing give his first account as an army leader in the course of an independently executed offensive movement against a tempting an object as the German salient position of St. Mihiel prevented.

With great discernment, a limited goal had been chosen for the operative task allotted to him. Demonstrating the sound ambition of a soldier without which a military leader cannot be imagined, General Pershing very energetically insisted upon having this task allotted to him by the Supreme Commander of the Allied Army. From an American point of view, he simply had to take such an action.

I have tangible information in assuming that the people of the United States and the army, for reasons of prestige, impatiently waited for General Pershing to make his debut as an army leader.

An Unmistakable Success

I shall not withhold from General Pershing my recognition of the extensive preparation with which he very cleverly led up to the actual offensive. That pressure, right from the start, exerted almost exclusively on the wings of our far-flung wedge-like position, was the result of simple and logical contemplation.

It must not be overlooked at this point, that, in view of the fact that the Americans employed superior forces, their success was to be considered a foregone conclusion.

Long since, I had arrived at the opinion that it was simply impossible to defend this "unnatural" position—which had developed years ago, at the end of mobile warfare—against an offensive supported by all means of modern warfare.

I had resolved, if necessary, to permit the troops employed at the salient to withdraw to the shorter tangent position in the Woevre Plains, which had been fortified long before.

General Pershing should consider it a stroke of good luck that the ultimate withdrawal of our troops from the salient, as ordered by me, was carried out too late, in spite of the fact that the offensive intentions of the enemy had been recognized in time.

Now that a defensive battle on the part of the weak German forces had become unavoidable, one of my divisions on the south front, exposed to the main thrust of the Americans, failed me.

Inasmuch as the Americans succeeded in penetrating our position deeply at this spot, their whole enterprise developed into an unmistakable success.

The amount of booty, thus gathered, exerted great influence on the morale and leadership of the troops.

I venture the opinion here that it would have been possible for the Americans to win a much greater and more decisive victory, if their initial successes had been exploited with more decisiveness and firmness of intention.

Spirit and Courage

As a matter of fact, they did not succeed in preventing the German forces, on the heights of the Meuse, from withdrawing to their prepared tangent position. I am unable to decide, however, whether this must be traced to the Supreme Command or to the action of subordinate officers.

[The reader will be interested to read later the detailed account of the capture of St. Mihiel narrated by Major-General Von Ledelm, in command of the German, in which he credits the Americans with extraordinary success.—Editor's note]

As far as later achievements of General Pershing, during the battle of the Marne and in the Argonne, are concerned, today as well as during the war, I offer my opinion with the strict reservation that I do not know to what extent the American supreme commander depended in his decisions and actions on orders by Marshal Foch.

To my mind, even in view of the latest writings of Marshal Foch [Printed exclusively in the Hearst papers last April], the premise has not been sufficiently cleared, as to whether the Marshal, with his general offensive—commencing around the end of September along the whole front, from the North Sea to the Meuse—aimed at a definite operation, or whether he merely intended to break up the German front, by virtue of continued hammering.

If, as frequently thought, the Marshal's operations as a whole are considered from the point of view that it was his intention to encircle the Germans in the interior of Belgium, for the purpose of a great "Sedan," then it would have been the task of General Pershing and his army to deliver to both sides of the Meuse, along the watershed right west of the gross of the German troops in Northern France, the decisive blow against our left flank and our lines of communication at the rear.

If this really was the intention, then it is necessary to record that the American Supreme Command did not accomplish its goal. I believe, however, that General Pershing did not aim so much at achieving important operative goals, but rather at smashing the German front opposing him.

This I conclude from his army order of September 24th, in which he says.

"The Allied Armies have now entered upon their biggest united movement along the whole Western Front. It is of utmost importance that the First Army advance with the greatest possible energy. Apparently, the enemy is retreating before us, and our success must be fully exploited. Pursuit operations must continue, in order to cause confusion and demoralization within the German lines, thus preventing the enemy from reorganizing their wavering troops. I rely upon the splendid spirit and courage of our army to surmount all resistance. This is what our country expects of us."

But even this goal the Americans did not achieve, in spite of their tactical successes in the Meuse-Argonne battle which stand out sharply against the inferior results achieved by the French, attacking to the left of them from the region of the Champagne.

Pressure in Argonne

As far as details of American generalship are concerned, I wish to point out the cleverness with which they succeeded in camouflaging their extensive preparations for the great offensive between the Meuse and the Argonne, despite the fact that the date for the attack had been advanced several days.

True, the nature of the country as well as favorable lines of communication and the weather proved valuable allies. Only under these conditions was it possible to relieve divisions, previously employed along this new line of attack, with shock troops assembled mostly by motors, as late as during the night before the offensive actually started.

I would also term as an effective measure the fact that the Americans based their attack chiefly on the element of surprise. After a nocturnal artillery preparation lasting only a few hours—quite contrary to the extensive firing indulged in by the French—they launched their infantry attacks from improvised positions, with thick fog screening their movements.

The first phase of the offensive, at the end of September, consisted of an attack of closely arrayed forces, along a comparatively short front, with the main issue of operations in the centre. It subsequently proved impossible to achieve fully the desired ends.

In the second phase of the offensive, beginning with October 4, and lasting until about the middle of the month, the centre of gravity was shifted farther to the west, along the Aire, and the attack eventually extended as far as the Argonne. Beginning with October 8 the basis for operations was even extended to the east, beyond the Meuse.

There is still discussion as to whether such a procedure was warranted. If, during the second phase, the attack would have been limited, as it had been previously, to a short front, with closely arrayed forces, and in a strictly northerly direction, it would have been possible to keep the offensive going for a long time by repeated employment of new units.

In case the Americans had actually made decided progress in the Woevre Plains the Germans would have been obliged to abandon their Argonne positions, without offering any resistance.

It should not be overlooked that, primarily for tactical reasons, it became necessary for the defender to detail forces for effective flanking artillery fire from the eastern border of the Argonne, as well as from the other bank of the Meuse.

As the pressure exerted in the Argonne sector necessitated the withdrawal of the right wing of the fifth German army behind the Aire, an additional strategical advantage developed for the opponent: the third German army, whose make up to now had successfully withstood the French attacks in the Champagne, had to retreat behind the Aisne-Aire line during the nights of October 9 to 12.

An Important Task

Let me add here that, to my mind, the extension of the base of attack beyond the Meuse to the east appeared absolutely correct.

From a purely general point of view—and this concerns especially the third phase of the offensive, which started at the end of October and lasted until November 11—it becomes that the American-French pressure against the eastern bank of the Meuse by the army further inland, for strong enough.

As far as the general scope of operations was concerned, the important task was to prevent the Germans from gaining a firm footing along their Antwerp-Meuse position. The most effective means to this end surely did not consist in exerting frontal pressure, but rather in the greatest possible intensification of pressure at every spot where the other bank of the Meuse was already occupied, that is, to the north and northeast of Verdun.

Tactical, as well as strategical, reasons would have advocated such a procedure. However, as mentioned before, I am in no position to say whether that which I personally consider as the lacking pressure of a would be encircling movement at this point is to be blamed on French or American leadership.

SECRET REPORTS ON A. E. F. BY GERMAN EXPERTS

In his second article in this historic series Ludendorff not only will continue his own appraisement of the A. E. F. but will include the verbatim reports of German military observers who were placed in the front lines of the Kaiser's armies to study the efficiency and power of the American forces. These reports are now printed for the first time. This notable article will appear in NEXT SUNDAY'S MARCH OF EVENTS SECTION.

'WHAT EACH WOMAN MUST FACE SOMETIME!'

Alice Williamson Explains Whispers of Tragedy in Feminine Hearts

"No Woman Can Hope to Hold Love Forever"

By ALICE M. WILLIAMSON

(Author of Romances, Novels, Short Stories and Articles.)

SHE enters her room, switches on the light, and looks into the mirror. How pretty she is! Really, it's true that she doesn't look a day over twenty-five. She hums the air of the last fox-trot she danced with that very nice man, five minutes ago. Not the nicest man of all, but a very nice man.

She is happy. It was a very pleasant evening. And she had plenty of attention, as much—oh, well, almost as much as the youngest and prettiest girl in this gay resort hotel. She was treated not only as a celebrity ought to be treated, but as a charming woman wants to be treated. And there wasn't a dress prettier than hers.

Best of all, here's a letter from a man whom she could adore, if she dared. He seemed to like her. Maybe his letter will make her sure—one way or the other. She is eager to know.

NORMAN LYNDS.

IF THE man decides that the time for love-making is over, it's over, and that's that.

Yet, when the letter came, just after the dance, she wouldn't open it, for fear it might dash her drink. And she wanted to keep it at top level.

Changing Moonlight

Even now she hesitates to read it. She goes closer to the mirror, and studies her reflection intently. Thirty-five and looking ten years younger! Strong, well and quite among the successful ones of the world, but so much more feminine, so much more attractive, in most of the successful young she women she knows.

She opens the letter—

At the very first words her heart sinks. Sam had told him to do it by her Christian name. It doesn't. This letter is merely pleasant and friendly. There is no love in it.

And she—the woman she must try to forget, or else be miserable, as she has been miserable before.

She lets the letter drop. Her quietly, her pleasure in being a pretty, admired woman is gone.

She switches off the light and walks to the window overlooking the sea.

The moon is full and has risen late. Downstairs, when she sat out a dance with the very nice man, the light seemed mellow and golden. It lay scattered on the water like yellow coins, all meant for her, coming in with the tide. Now the tide is ebbing. And the moonlight is as cold as steel.

That is the difference—for a woman of thirty-five—between being with a man who likes her, loves her, may, and being alone, lonely, disappointed, hurt.

A woman ought never to look at the moonlight on the sea when she is alone. It will always be cold and cruel, never golden. All the tragedy that is always behind women her age will overwhelm her. She can't help it often, yet she has tried to ignore it, to push it aside. Now she can no longer.

Fading Romance

There, in the cold, lonely moonlight with the sea murmuring below, is the woman who was dancing and flirting a few moments ago. She knows the tragedy that is all set to be part of every woman's inheritance.

The hardest fact, she tells herself in that no woman, even if she wins it, not once but many times, can hope to hold love for ever. There are few men also in me, do not live of the women they have wed. In heart-of-hearts defense, only too many women have to plead to the world that it is they who have tired.

If for some reason, a man and woman who love cannot marry, the man tires by and by, despite the obstacles that has seemed to a time to make his love the greater. If they marry, he tires a little faster, perhaps, because they are bound together. For romance fades sooner, that way than when some glamour or mystery remains. Part of woman's tragedy is that the average woman is, by nature, more steadfast than man. She could rest on loving and being romantic forever if she had the chance. A man can't. The exceptions are too few to be worth counting.

Another tragedy of woman is that, even in these days of man and superwoman, man still has the privilege of making the offer. A woman can't actually throw herself at a man's head, however she may be flattered, yet she feels repulsion for men in the hunter and always will be, no matter how independent and self-supporting and emancipated women become.

It is man's prerogative after all to take the first step—and skills in love as in everything else. Women must wait and wait—and wait—and wonder—what does he mean by this or that? Does he think of her? And what, and how? If she really cares and tries to force an unfascinating there is danger of scaring him off.

"How fortunate we seem, we women, here in America, whom men have set up on a pedestal. We seem the equals of men, almost their superiors, sometimes, in opportunity. But it's only in the surface things, like money and luxury and leisure; not in love, the most important thing of all."

Incredulous Youth

True it is that many a man finds a new interest in a woman who doesn't love him with a cold, hot, cold, never golden. All the tragedy that is always behind women her age will overwhelm her. She can't help it often, yet she has tried to ignore it, to push it aside. Now she can no longer.

Looks or Merits?

But what an uphill struggle! Some girls who haven't good looks have such personal magnetism that it gives them a charm that is beyond beauty. The best girl without such charm and without looks can do is to be a big and friendly sister and pal. That point. How often it is said of a man: "He's not good looking and he hasn't much personality, but when you get to know him, you'll see his sterling qualities."

But, if a woman has neither beauty nor charm few people take the trouble to know her.

Some women use rugged ugliness in a man. They see in him just as easily by a plain man as by a handsome one. A man has trouble in finding a job because he has an ugly nose, but a woman? Kathleen Norris:

'It Takes Something Poignant, Terrible to Show Us How Fortunate We Are'

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

THE memoirs of a certain Russian woman ought to be broadcasted all over this rich and wide and prosperous land, on this Sunday before Thanksgiving Day. It takes something poignant and terrible and real, sometimes, to awaken us from our dream of plenty and show us how fortunate and how safe we are, and the effect of this story upon me has been to put me into an ideal Thanksgiving mood of humble amazement and gratitude.

This woman was not a peasant, she was a count's mother's wife, and she belonged to the educated class, and her husband was drafted into the ranks, and their brother obtained an exemption and went away, too, with a family of children, girls of 11, 9 and 7, and a boy of 6, went into the country, to her father's estate.

Here, for the first three years of the war, they had a sort of homely plenty, some flour, eggs, candles, potatoes, sometimes cheese, butter, types of flour, and always fresh meat.

THEY didn't have much to be thankful for—Priscilla and Charity and Makepeace and Jabez. But we have!

Broth of Roots

Her father died, her husband never was heard of again; she and the old servants were devoted by a common need, and stretched their poor means as best they could.

Madame should have had some rents from tenants in her little town, but they never came, and for a year or more and more of the village was reduced now to some fifty or sixty women, many children, and the dying old persons, who were picked off by the cold weather like so many flies.

In that remote country dastitet the benefits of the Armistice were slow in making themselves felt, and the bitter suffering went on into 1919 and 1920. Madame kept hoping that one of her letters to husband or brother would bring aid, and meanwhile she and the children made a miserable brew of roots, stewed herring and beet and rolled potatoes, gnawed on hard black bread and mouldy cheese, and hunted the few eggs that the orchards still bore.

In the spring of 1920 occasional returning soldiers began to drift through the town, but their reports and stories were more than so appalling that Madame decided to stay where she was. By this time all the cows, even the horses, had long been killed and eaten.

The terrors of having not one penny in money, in having no male protector, in being reduced to fight for the lives of the children above life or death meant absolutely nothing to anyone in the world beside herself, now made this woman with dull force, and incapable as everyone in the village was emaciated and dying, and suffering from anemia, scurvy, typhus, or some other form of after-war pestilence, she determined to make her way toward the centers where help, if it came, must arrive first.

She had not food for the road, and their clothes were rags, but she fabricated rough garments of some old fur robes and blankets, and set out for the nearest village, about eleven miles away.

The little girl of six had to be carried over drifts, and the whole family were so weak that they made very slow progress, but in the afternoon they came to the outskirts of the town, and found a house where lights were lights, and a family sitting at a meal.

She Was Forced to Beg

The mother says that even then she hardly knew what to do, she had never begged, but she could see no other course now. So half-pushing and half-dragging the children she approached the house, and, standing humbly in the snow, asked a woman at the door, if she could spare them a little food.

The woman, pale and serious-looking herself, looked at them and rolled potatoes, gnawed on hard black bread and mouldy cheese, and handed the food again that the orchards still bore.

MAYFLOWER DINNER LEADS THE SMART EVENTS OF THE WEEK

Sir Esme and Lady Isabella Howard in Town for Week-End—Mrs. Oakes Ames' Smart Dance Comes Wednesday—Two Weddings Are Also Scheduled

By Florence Cowles

SIR ESME HOWARD and Lady Isabella Howard arrived in town yesterday, coming up from Washington to attend the Mayflower dinner tomorrow night at the Hotel Somerset, quite the smartest function of the early Winter.

They went to the Summer home of Dr. and Mrs. Henry F. Sears at Beverly for the week-end.

Sir Thomas Tait also arrived yesterday and was met by Major Walter Merriam Pratt, chairman of the dinner committee, whose guest he is to be while in Boston. Senator Frederick H. Gillett and Mrs. Gillett arrive in town tomorrow. They will stop at the Hotel Somerset.

Sir Thomas was the guest of Major and Mrs. Pratt at the Harvard-Yale game yesterday, after which the party took tea at the home of Professor F. N. Robinson and Mrs. Robinson at Longfellow Park, Cambridge. In the evening, Major and Mrs. Pratt gave a dinner party in his honor.

Today the S. Nason Hamlins are giving a luncheon for him at their home in Dedham and this afternoon Mrs. James Cushing Bayley of No. 15 Marlboro street is giving a tea in his honor at the Country Club in Brookline. A dinner party follows tonight at which Mrs. Arthur Childs will be hostess, the dinner being given at her Bay State road house, and tomorrow Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller is giving a luncheon for Sir Thomas at her home on Beacon street.

On Tuesday Mr. and Mrs. Robert Treat Paine are giving a luncheon for him at the Somerset Club and in the afternoon, he will attend the all-star benefit performance at the Hollis Street Theatre in aid of injured ex-service men. Sir Thomas leaves Boston Tuesday evening.

OF DEBUTANTE affairs, Mrs Albert J. Meserve of No. 174-175 Middlesex road opens the week with tea which she is giving at the Country Club in honor of her daughter, Miss Barbara Meserve, tomorrow. Miss Alice Dahl of Duluth, Minn., a school friend of Miss Meserve's, is her house guest, having come over from New York last Friday in time to take in the Harvard-Yale game. Miss Meserve is giving an informal tea in her honor at her house today, and on Tuesday Miss Nancy Hobbs, who is to be in charge of the girls serving tea on Monday, is to give a bridge and tea at No. 318 Commonwealth avenue.

ON MONDAY evening comes the dinner and dance which Mr. and Mrs. George Frost of Spooner road, Chestnut Hill, are giving for their daughter, Miss Helen Frost, and for Miss Elizabeth Goodridge at the Women's Republican Club, No. 46 Beacon street. Miss Goodridge is the daughter of Mrs. F. J. Goodridge of Appian way, Cambridge.

Mr. and Mrs. Frost are giving the ushers' dinner at the Club and Miss Peggy Read is giving dinner at her home in Cambridge.

ON Tuesday, Mrs. Arthur E. Grannis of No. 15 Kennard road, Brookline, presents her third daughter, Miss Eleanora Isaggi Grannis at a tea at her house. The dance which Mrs. Ashley C. Hardy was to have given that evening at the Algonquin Club for her daughter, Miss Alison Hardy, has been postponed because of illness.

At 3:30 o'clock, in the First Congregational Church, Cambridge, comes the wedding of Miss Elizabeth Amsden Stevens and Lieutenant Ralph Mills, U. S. N. followed by a reception at The Commander.

Mrs. Edward Gilchrist is giving a tea and dance on Wednesday at the Women's Republican Club, No. 46 Beacon street, for her daughter, Miss Katherine Gilchrist.

THE smartest dance of the week is that which Professor Oakes Ames and Mrs. Ames are giving Thanksgiving eve at their house at No. 225 Bay State road for their daughter, Miss Evelyn Ames. Miss Ames is giving a big dinner before it for the ushers, and Mrs. F. Lothrop Ames is giving a dinner for her daughter, Miss Mary Ames. Jr. Milton, Mrs. Bernard W. Trafford is giving a dinner for Miss Annette Trafford.

FRIDAY, the day after Thanksgiving is the day which Mrs. Walter C. Bixby of Harvard street, Cambridge, has chosen for the luncheon she is giving at the Chilton Club in honor of Miss Barbara Bailey. The tea which Mrs. Arthur L. Jackson was giving for Miss Rosamond Jackson has been cancelled. Mrs. Jackson will give a dance for her daughter January 10, instead.

MISS LOUISE RUSSELL of Brookline attended the horse show arranged by the Norfolk Hunt Club and held recently at Medfield.

MISS ELIZABETH SPRAGUE drove her smart motor up to Medfield, where she was joined by Miss Beatrice Howell.

MISS DOROTHY NEWHART, M. F. H., of the Norfolk Hunt, and Mr. F. Jared Bliss, Jr., stopped at the horse show.

MR. F. MURRAY FORBES and his young daughter, Miss Dorothy Forbes, rode together in the "family class."

NEWS of INTEREST to SOCIETY

MRS. O. H. P. BELMONT BACK IN NEW YORK

By Cholly Knickerbocker
Registered U. S. Patent Office.

New York, Saturday, Nov. 19

THAT social Sultana, Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont, arrived from Europe on the Aquitania, and not a single ship news reporter was sufficiently daring to mention, in her presence, that certain annulment the Rota in Rome granted her daughter, the former Duchess of Marlborough, now Mme. Jacques Balsan.

Mrs. Belmont sailed away from New York in a justifiable rage at the very height of the annulment controversy. The downger, who has the distinction of having married two of New York's wealthiest and most prominent men, adhered to her "nothing-to-say" attitude until she reached the other side of the Atlantic and was settled in her historic chateau on the Loire—far, far from enterprising metropolitan reporters who ask harrassing questions.

Once h the Loire however, Mrs. Belmont had much to say in private about the whole affair, and she even intimated she never again would live in the U. S. A. due to the "treatment" accorded her by the American press. It is business that brings her back this time, and she probably will engage return passage on a steamer that will land her in France in time for the season on the Riviera, where she has a splendid villa adjoining the Winter home of her tall daughter whose dressed now are almost snow white.

AS was reported several weeks ago, Mr. and Mrs. William Randolph Hearst have purchased Mrs. Belmont's Long Island country house, Beacon Towers situated on a peninsula jutting out in Long Island Sound from Sands Point, and the equally impressive Marble House at Newport, also in the real estate market. Once the has disposed of Marble House, she has disposed of Marble House, Mrs. Belmont will have burned the last bridge connecting her with the New York-Newport set—a colony in which she once wielded supreme power.

Mrs. Belmont's life, if recorded in black and white, would resemble one of Grimm's fairy tales. Only it would be a fact, not fiction. From a more or less obscure Southern miss, without money and only a meager wardrobe, she rose to spectacular heights in the American social and financial firmament, responsible for the Vanderbilts being "accepted" socially, and designed and built more costly homes than any woman of her generation.

Today, Mrs. Belmont, no longer a young woman, has lost interest in society and other people's affairs claimed her attention.

But she never will cease building. While her intimates of other days now derive pleasure from juggling cards at bridge tables, Mrs. Belmont finds her chief enjoyment in toying with bricks and mortar.

VIRGINIA CRAW will not, as has been reported elsewhere, make her debut this Winter.

Virginia is one of the subtlest of the sub-debs, and her formal introduction to the bonds-men will be deferred for two years.

However, the comely miss' parents, the William Thaws, 3d, of No. 1,030 Fifth avenue, have taken the small, but attractive, ballroom at the Madison for New Year's Eve, and will give a dinner dance there on that night in her honor.

We will pass quickly over Virginia's relation to Harry Kendall Thaw, for that is not a social distinction. It is something worthwhile, however, to be a first cousin of Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., and Cordelia Biddle Roberts. Virginia's mater is the younger sister of the senior Mrs. A. J. Drexel Biddle of this city and Philadelphia, and down at Bulwampian, Virginia, has caused many "pop" school hearts to beat a bit faster than normal.

BACK in the days when New York's sartorially upholstered elegantes residing in the great brownstone mansions that lined Twenty-third street, west of Fifth avenue, waxed indignant over the late Jay Gould's financial chicanery and were laying polite bets as to the Vanderbilts' chances of ever winning social recognition, it would have been social suicide for any consequential bride to walk to the altar during the then unfashionable late afternoon

Evening weddings, with the bridegroom in full evening regalia, were "the thing" in that dear, romantic mauve era

Fashions in everything—even nuptial events—have a way of changing, and today, in this city of the rich and rude and poor and polite, it is considered the worst taste to be married after 4 p. m. The 4 o'clock wedding is in high favor with the social Olympians who form our new aristocracy, and I will be at a loss to know why Elizabeth Chapin and Kenneth Patterson elected to do the unfashionable the other evening.

Suffice, the great swells and little cripples of Gotham's social pond experienced a new thrill when they gathered in the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas on Fifth avenue at the very hour they usually are to be found fighting their way through Broadway traffic to this or that playhouse.

Some of the poor dears were in a dilemma. News having attended all evening wedding they were at a loss to know whether to wear low neck short skirts are quarts of jewels or "just something simple". Result: an amazing array of costumes ranging from sports coats to creations suitable for Box No. 1 in the "golden horseshoe" at the opera. The new Mrs. Patterson is a daughter of the Simeon B. Chapins, now of upper Fifth avenue, formerly residents of Chicago.

Miss Stevens to Wed Tuesday

ON Tuesday evening, at 8.30 o'clock in the First Congregational Church of Cambridge, comes the wedding of Miss Elizabeth Amsden Stevens and Lieutenant Ralph Erskine Mills, U. S. N. It is a naval wedding and will be a very smart affair.

The bridegroom and ushers are officers on board of the U. S. S. Florida which put into the Charles river Navy Yard last Monday. Miss Stevens, who is the daughter of Mr. Harold M. Stevens, of No. 19 Larch Road, Cambridge, will be attended by Miss Orient Nichols and Miss Harden Torrens, Cambridge, as maid of honor. Her bridesmaids will be Miss Emma Ward and Miss Elizabeth Goodridge of Cambridge, Miss Janet Smith of Bay State Road, Miss Barbara Watters of Winchester.

Lieutenant Mills will be attended by his brother, Mr. Robert L. Mills of New York, and the ushers will be Commander C. M. Blake, Lieutenant Clarence E. Wyneeoff, Lieutenant George Grunberry, Lieutenant Alfred Randolph, Ensign Frank W. Fenno and Ensign William Anderson.

Lieutenant Mills is the son of Rev. and Mrs. James Spencer Mills of Atlanta, Ga.

The day before the wedding Miss Ward is giving a luncheon for the ushers and bridesmaids at her home in Cambridge and in the evening, Miss Barbara Watters is giving a dinner party in Winchester in honor of the bridal party.

Before the wedding, Mrs. E. T. Nichols, Jr., is giving a dinner in honor of Mr. Robert Caldwell of Atlanta, a sister of Lieutenant Mills, at her home on Brattle street.

Miss Vose to Wed Mr. G. W. Walker

TODAY Mr. and Mrs. Louis E. Vose of No. 2 Charles River square are announcing the engagement of their daughter, Miss Nancy Vose, to Mr. Guy Warren Walker, Jr., of No. 54 Brimmer street. Mr. Walker graduated from Harvard in 1926. Miss Vose is a member of the Junior League. No date has been set for the wedding.

Smart Attendants at Ayer-Steward Wedding

THE bridesmaids and maid of honor who attended Miss Ann Beekman Ayer when she became the bride of Mr. Gilbert Livingston Steward in Christ Church, Hamilton. Left to right: Miss Jean Sears, Miss Emily Davis Miss Theodora Ayer, sister of the bride, who served as her maid of honor; Miss Eloise Lawrence and Miss Ellen Bohlen. The day following the wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fanning Ayer announced the engagement of Miss Theodora Ayer to Mr. Robert Winthrop of Hamilton

Here and There With Society

MISS ROSA ANNE GROSVENOR of Wyndham villa, Newport aunt of Mrs. George Peabody Gardner, Jr., and Mrs. Richard C. Curtis of Boston, has opened her Grosvenor house on Amwell street, Providence, which has been closed several years. Miss Grosvenor will remain there for several weeks before returning to her New York apartment in Park avenue for the winter months.

YELLOW flowers decorated the tea table when, last week Mrs. Philip S. Johnson received her friends at her home in Brookline. Mrs. Johnson was attractively gowned in a gown of velvet and brocade and Miss Barbara Edwin U. Curtis presided at the tea table, her costume being a French model of lace combined with chiffon with which she wore a large hat of velvet and lace.

REV. GEORGE GRENVILLE MERRILL and his daughter Miss Natalie Hayward Merrill, are sailing on Wednesday for Italy where they will join Mrs. Merrill and the younger daughter, Miss Margery Merrill. They will return to their Summer home in Sudbridge June 27. Mr. George Merrill is in Princeton University. He is a member of the class of '21.

MISS LILLIAN RANGER of New York is the house guest of Miss Evelyn Ames of Bay State road, having come over for the Harvard-Yale game. She is to be one of the guests at the dinner which Mr. and Mrs. Oakes Ames are giving on Wednesday evening for their daughter. Others who come on from New York for the game, dance and holiday are Mr. and Mrs. Francis T. P. Plimpton, the latter formerly Miss Pauline Ames.

* * *

AN informal luncheon given yesterday before the Harvard Yale game was that which Miss Jane Prouty gave at her home on Walnut street, Brookline, the entire party going over to Cambridge later.

Mrs. Herbert Ewer Opens a Shop

ANOTHER smart recruit in the business world is Mrs. Herbert L. Ewer of Gorham avenue, Brookline, who, with Miss Margaret Burnham, has opened an antique shop on Newbury street. An attractive feature of this venture is the Monday afternoon teas from four to six when one or two of her friends come in to pour tea for her, thereby making the business since quite a rendezvous for friends.

At the first of these Monday teas given last week, Mrs. J. Lowell Little and Mrs. William F. Putnam poured tea. Tomorrow, Mrs. Alexander Steinert will be assisted by Mrs. Rudolph Steinert, who came over to Boston for the Harvard-Yale game and is staying on a few days.

Before her marriage, Mrs. Ewer was Miss Louise Kittredge, daughter of the late Mr. Charles F. Kittredge. Her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Ewer made her debut last Winter. Last Summer, Miss Ewer took up candy making as a profession at which she has been most successful.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN

By Florence J. Cowles

ALTHOUGH circumstances prevented a Boston debut at this time, Miss Katharine Howe, the charming young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dudley P. Howe, is to go on to New York next month to attend the debut of Miss Eleanor Pratt, I hear. Miss Howe is to be the house guest of Mrs. Harold Pratt. The dance comes December 27, and will be one of New York's most important debutante parties.

Miss Howe

Another Boston girl who has pleasant things in store for her in New York is Miss Elizabeth Sherman of Mt. Vernon street, who is to go on to New York early in December to attend the first New York Assembly, December 2. She will be the guest there of Miss Lillian Sanger, who is to be hostess at a dinner party before the ball.

WITH the holidays soon upon us, more society women are taking at least a flyer into the business world. Again for the holiday season Mrs. A. Nicholas Reggio of Chestnut street, Brookline, and Mrs. Robert Whitman Mason of Fisher avenue are opening a shop in the Park Square Building, where they will sell negligees, lingerie, lampshades, Egyptian cottons and other novelties.

Mrs. Augustus Rantoul's shop on Dartmouth street, near Newbury, is flourishing, her venture proving a decided success. Mrs. Bellows Robinson has moved farther up Newbury street, now having a most attractive little shop almost opposite the Ritz.

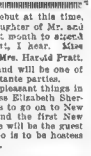
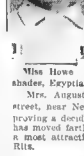
MISS MARGOT AMORY and Mrs. William G. Perry have launched their most attractive little book shop under the Vendome. Mrs. S. Parker Bremer made her debut as a professional singer last Wednesday night in Jordan Hall as Mabel Bremer; Miss Louisa James and Miss Helenka Adamowska have become professional actresses of note, and I hear that Miss E. Barbara Merriam, daughter of the Bruce Merriams of Providence, is spending the Winter in Boston, having become a member of the Copley Players.



Mrs. Reggio



Miss Amory

Miss Dorothea Heath, who made her debut last Winter, now has a studio at No. 39 Newbury street, where she spends her days at the piano. Mrs. Endicott Marean has opened an antique shop on Concord avenue, Cambridge; Miss Eleanor Mason is holding down a very fine position in a large Boston store, while her mother, Mrs. Herbert L. Mason, is manager of the Women's Republican Club on Beacon street.

* * *

MR. AND MRS. JOHN H. SHERBURNE and Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Heath are giving a dinner dance at the Country Club on Friday evening for Miss Elizabeth Sherburne and Miss Betty Heath. Several dinner parties will precede the affair, two of which will be given by Miss Alice Sherburne and Miss Dorothea Heath

Lunching at the Junior League

LUNCHEONS at the Junior League headquarters at No. 6 Commonwealth avenue are being extremely well attended this year much to the gratification of the committee having them in charge. Among those lunching at the League on Monday were Mrs. Roger Growoski, Mrs. William Barron, Miss Katherine Thatcher Miss Helen Jackson, Miss Sarah Winslow, Miss Virginia Lees, Miss Eleanor Gibson and Miss Ellen Hallowell.

On Tuesday, Miss Ethel Haise of the New Orleans Junior League was a guest at luncheon, while other members of the Boston League lunching there included Miss Mary Louise Butterfield Mrs. Henry Bliss, Miss Barbara Reynolds Miss Katherine Dalton, Miss Isabella Mumford, Mrs. Frederick Kingsbury, Mrs. Lyon Weyburn, Mrs. David Arnold and Mrs. Henry Nichols.

MISS KATHERINE DODGE daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Dodge of Bay State road, who, following her graduation from Johns Hopkins Medical School studied medicine last Winter in London, as at present taking further courses at Johns Hopkins. Her engagement to Mr. Clement M. Burnhome of Boston and Newburyport was announced last Spring.

Mrs. Orcutt Has Smart Audiences

EXCEEDINGLY smart were the audiences at both of Mrs. William Dana Orcutt's drawing room talks given last Monday afternoon and evening in the stately Beacon street residence of Governor and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller. Mrs. Fuller was a delightful and gracious hostess and for the afternoon program of "Italian Madonnas in Art" she wore a chiffon and velvet gown done in rich mulberry tones. Mrs. Orcutt a costume of tan velvet was topped with a cloak of the brown hue and she wore a single strand of pearls

Miss Nathaniel Thayer in black taffeta, was of the early arrivals. Mrs. Hovey Wolcott was one of the notable matrons present and with her was her son, Mr. Oliver Wolcott, Mrs. Henry Richmond Fearing was a slender, distinguished figure in the crowded room where hung the famous Romneys, Romneys and Turners, and for the occasion she had on a smartly fashioned frock of jade green, combined with black Mrs. Thorndike Howe, who ushered with Miss Rebekah Hobbs, was in black, with touches of white, and Miss Hobbs gown was very dark blue trimmed in a brighter shade of the same color

Again in the evening, every gilded chair was taken and the company was a sumptuous one sartorially Mrs. Philip Sears, who came with Mr. Sears, was notably attractive in her evening gown of black shading with many brilliants Mr. and Mrs. George E. Warren were there, Mrs Warren's green metal gown most effective. Mrs Augustus Rantoul was in a supple pink satin and Miss Rose Dexter had on a deep blue velvet. Mrs. John Chipman Gray and Mrs. Henry H. Sprague were together, the former in gray and the latter in black. Mrs. Walter Bowes, whose a metal gown done iridescent tones.

Mr and Mrs. Horace Binney just recently back to town from Newport, were greeted by many friends. Mrs. Binney wore a stunning rose velvet offset with jewels of diamonds and pearls Mrs. William Butler came with Senator Butler and Mr and Mrs B. H. Bristow Draper was there with a party of dinner guests Mrs. Sears' chiffon gown was all sparkling with brilliants and Mrs. Bruce Smith wore green. Mrs. Oscar L. Hubert, who after the talk poured coffee in the dining room, was very smartly attired in black chiffon trimmed in deep silver lace

Mrs Walter M Pratt and Miss Ruth Fawles ushered. Mrs. Pratt in black chiffon and Miss Fawles in frock of black over white studded with pearls and brilliants.

MRS. HENRY LEE HIGGINSON, 2ND, Mrs. Andrew J. Peters, Mrs. Bernard W. Trafford and Mrs. Charles Frederick Weed are sponsoring the series of six-teen tea dances to be given under the auspices of the Repertory. The first club of Boston in Repertory Hall each Saturday from four to seven o'clock.

Mrs. S. P. Bremer Makes Her Debut

IT was a very lovely concert in Jordan Hall on Wednesday night at which Mrs. S. Parker Bremer, of No. 91 Chestnut street, made her debut on the concert stage under the name of Mabel Bremer. The hall was crowded with a smart audience, composed of friends as well as others, and the reception she received was most enthusiastic. But Mrs. Bremer deserved it. Her program was very interesting and her voice was lovely. She was assisted by Mr. Cornelius van Vliet, first cellist of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra.

Mrs. Bremer wore a smart French frock of black taffeta with white sardenias outlining the V neck of her frock on the left side. She carried a bouquet of white roses, when she first came on the stage. Her three lovely daughters, all blonde and strongly resembling their beautiful mother, were in the audience, as were Mrs. Bremer's two son-in-law, Dr. Henry Hadwick Faxon and Mr. George P. Baker, Jr.

A few of those present were Mrs. Walcott Johnson, Dr. Elwood Worcester and his daughter. Miss Constance Worcester Mrs. Edward Sohier Webb, Mrs. Harrison Brown, Mr. and Mrs. George Hawley, Mrs. Thorn's Lindsey, Mrs. James Reed and Mr and Mrs. Arthur W Kennard

News and Notes of the World of Art

By Jean Nutting Oliver

THE memorial exhibition of works by the late George H. Hallowell at the St. Botolph Club was opened during the week, with a large number of pictures well placed upon the walls of this ever hospitable gallery.

Mr. Hallowell was born in Boston in 1858 and received his art education here. His work was highly esteemed from the first by his brother artists and gradually became appreciated by the general public. That famous American master, John Singer Sargent once spoke of him as "America's greatest colorist," and before the time of his death, a year ago, Hallowell was acknowledged as one of the foremost artists of his day.

The present collection, which has been assembled from thirty different owners, consists of mountain scenes, studies of the lumber camps and the men, the Maine woods, and other characteristic New England subjects.

Italian motifs, too, interested him, and in everything he produced the decorative design and treatment were factors in the success of the work. One remembers the "Goose Step" as hanging on the wall of the St. Botolph Club a few years ago. It subject and treatment it has the quality which attracts artists and laymen alike—horrible in its grotesque presentation.

The "Jeanne D'Arc," a medieval figure of a gracious decorativeness, is in another mood. The sturdy pose of the inspired peasant, with level brows and fu ture-seeing eyes, is balanced by the sweetness of the mouth and smooth contour of the young face

KAROLY FUELOP and Vladimir Pavlosky hold the Doll and Richards gallery. The latter is a native of Boston, trained in the art schools here, and paints, as has been said, with "Slavic spirit." Old Gloucester has been immortalized by him, with all its pungent color, vivid light and foreign savor. In "Marseilles Harbor in Summer" he records with vigor and character the lovely aspect of the place, while in "Italian Fishing Boats Gloucester" he repeats the success.

EUGENE HIGGINS, A. N. A., has a one-man show at the Vose Gallery, with Ireland as special discovery of motifs. His studies of the Galway fish-folk in their rough craft have an almost heroic intensity.

"Galway Fisherman" is one of these, showing an open boat with several fishermen in it, a turbulent sea, and a bold shore in the distance. "Turf Cutters" is titled "Man of the Village," "An Irish Kitchen" and "A Cottage in Fermoy, Ireland" are other rugged subjects painted in bold, true manner.

AT 40 Joy street, Herbert H. Patrick shows a large number of paintings, recent works. His is young, we are told, and this work is certainly to his credit. He has been taught a good method of laying on a picture, and he realizes ahead in a bold but convincing manner. Fifty or more examples make the gallery a very interesting place to wonder what he will produce in the future.

Artist to Address Plantations Club

Providence, R. I., Nov. 19

THE first of the season's afternoon tea-talks in the lovely new assembly room of the Providence Plantations Club will be held Wednesday afternoon, when Miss Vaney Dyer will be the speaker. Miss Dyer, who recently returned from Europe with her parents where she painted and sketched in Italy, France and Holland, will have for her subject on Wednesday, "Heroes and Heroines Along the Rivers of Europe," in telling a story of her personal experiences with the peasant folk of Tarrytown, among whom she sketches and paints.

Clubwomen Guests of the Kalmia

THE Women's Clubs from the surrounding cities and towns will be the guests of the Kalmia Club of North Attlebero tomorrow afternoon at Grace Parish House at 3:45 o'clock. Mrs. Claude N. Gibson will speak on "An American Woman Looks at England."

Tea will be served by the hostesses, Mrs. G. Herbert French, Mrs. Arthur R. Merrifield, Mrs. Byron S. Gardner, Mrs. Frederick H. Burdy, Mrs. H. Irving Bixby, Mrs. William H. Conry, Mrs. Theron S. Curtis, Mrs. Arthur S. Bishop and Miss Marian D. White.

Right Angle Club

The Right Angle Club of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association, made up of the wives of the secretaries and officials of the Association, will hold its second meeting of the season at 2:30 Monday afternoon, at the auntington avenue branch of the Y. M. C. A. The Rev. Samuel M. Lindsay of Brookline will tell the club of the visit he made during the past Summer to the Robert Burns country and home in Scotland, and there will be a special musical program.

Girls' City Club Moves First of Month

A BANQUET for members only will mark the opening of the new home of the Girls' City Club of Boston on Saturday, December 3, at No. 190 Beacon street. The club, formed in 1915 from a group of three small clubs, has flourished so successfully that the membership now comprises six hundred business girls. It is the desire of the club to increase its number to one thousand before the end of 1928.

The house at No. 8 Newbury street, purchased shortly after the formation of the club for $40,000, has recently been sold for $120,000, and the charming house on Beacon street, which will henceforth be known as the Girls' City Club, was purchased at a figure fifty per cent.

The purpose of the club is to promote good fellowship and contribute to the educational and recreational opportunities of the young women of Boston, and it is with this idea in mind that the club hopes to swell its membership to an even thousand.

Miss Anna Malley will be hostess at a tea and open house today at No. 8 Newbury street, at which Miss Lillian Thorne is in charge. With several vocal selections. The usual classes and weekly activities will be held, as follows: Gymnasium, Tuesday, 7:30 p. m., at No. 178 Massachusetts avenue; handicraft class at the clubhouse, Wednesday, 6:30 p. m.; and swimming at the Somerville Y. M. C. A., Tuesday, 6 p. m.

Because of the holiday, the usual bowling on Thursday and the holiday dance will be omitted.

Club members and their friends are to spend a pleasant afternoon at Snowshoe Cottage, Wellesley, on Saturday. The athletic committee is in charge of the afternoon and an interesting program has been planned, which will be followed with a supper cooked and served by members of the group.

Journalism Class to Hear Miss Peck

MISS CAROLYN J. PECK, chairman of press and publicity, Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs, will give a talk before the club journalism class of Salem Woman's Club tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, at the home of Mrs. Arthur C. Hunt, No. 249 Lafayette street. At the close of the meeting tea will be served by the hostess committee.

Rummage Sale

Mrs. W. S. Carleton, of Newton, is chairman of the committee in charge of the annual Girl Scout Rummage Sale, to be held in Horticultural Hall, Tuesday, from 10 a. m. Other members of the committee include Mrs. Homer Albers, Mrs. Carl T. Keller, Mrs. Arthur G. Mitton, Mrs. Henry Ware, Mrs. A. Winsor Weld, and Mrs. Barrett Wendell. Articles for the sale may be left at the hall, or will be called for if Mrs. Carleton is notified.

Warden of Sing Sing Prison to Speak

WARDEN LEWIS E. LAWES of Sing Sing Prison, will be the guest speaker on the Women's City Club program this week, and his theme, "A Substitute for Capital Punishment," will be given in the auditorium of the Boston City Club, in order to accommodate the large audience that this combination of a popular subject and a popular speaker is certain to attract.

Warden Lawes has been a practical prison worker for twenty-two years and has been warden of the New York prison since 1920. He has done much for the betterment of the condition of prisoners and his welfare program is known throughout the country.

His subject has a particular appeal to Massachusetts at this time and will open "Capital Punishment week." When the question of capital punishment will be discussed, from pulpit and platform.

The remainder of the week will be given over to hospitality and a general observance of the holiday season. The decorations of the clubhouse, from the wreath on the door to the fireplace in the old kitchen, will recall the old New England traditions, and on Thanksgiving Day special dinners will be served in the dining rooms. Wednesday is the regular guest day at the club, and on Wednesday night informal bridge will be held in the card room at 40 No. 6 Walnut street.

The following week will make up in activities for the lull of the holiday season. Leading all activities will be the illustrated lecture to be given by Commander Richard E. Byrd, U. S. N., in Symphony Hall on December 1. His subject is to be, "The Atlantic and Other Flights" and the lecture is sponsored by the activities committee of the Women's City Club.

Beverley Nichols to Speak for Camp Fire Girls December 7

MRS. ROBERT F. HERRICK heads the committee to present Beverley Nichols, the young English author, to Boston for the first time the afternoon of December 7, when he will speak in the ballroom of the Hotel Somerset. Mr. Nichols, who is the author of "Crazy Pavements" and "The Sweet Shop," "The Sams at Home," has chosen to address his Boston audience about "Intimate Intrusions" which concern, he says, "the indigestions of unconceived celebrities."

The Boston committee includes: Miss Katherine Lee Bates, Mrs. Arthur Beale, Mr. and Mrs. Francis V. Crane, Miss Lotta A. Clark, Mrs. John Dewey, Mrs. Marian L. Higgins, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lee Higginson, 2nd, Mrs. Henry A. Lomb, the Honorable Andrew Peters, Dr. Payson Smith, Mrs. J. H. Thorpe and Leighton Rollins, chairman.

The proceeds will go to the Camp Fire House Fund for the Boston Council of Camp Fire Girls who have recently acquired the residence at 264 Commonwealth avenue. Miss Lotta A. Clark, president of the organization, announces that there is an extensive program of activities planned, and it is hoped that by Spring $10,000 will have been raised for the maintenance of Camp Fire House.

Mrs. Francis V. Crane is vice-president. Mrs. Marion L. Higgins, a newly appointed council member, has been named chairman of the house committee. At the semi-annual council meeting held Tuesday evening, Lieut. Governor Allen, in his address, highly commended the group and made a personal contribution of $500 toward the work. That evening Miss Margaret Thomas, formerly National field secretary, was introduced as the new Boston executive secretary, and Miss Carolyn Larsen as budget advisor.

ATTRACTIONS FOR THE WEEK on STAGE AND SCREEN

SOTHERN TURNS TO LIGHT COMEDY FOR TOUR JUST OPENED

Ted Healy, in Winter Garden Revue, Looms Up as Candidate for Stardom

By E. F. HARKINS.

IN "Gen. John Regan" the almost classic E. H. Sothern has turned again to light comedy. There have been few comedians to match him on the American stage in the last thirty years. His comedy roles were all around his best efforts in the Shakespeare plays. He thought of retiring a few years ago. Now he is back at the Hollis where he made some of his earliest successes.

"Gen. John Regan" . . . the work of an Irish humorist who signs himself George A. [illegible] Time it name of the dramatist is James Owen Hannay. He is canon of St. Patrick's Cathedral, in Dublin. The comedy now at the Hollis was first produced in London more than a dozen years ago by one of the most popular of the London stars, Sir Charles Hawtrey, who, by the way, was the son of a clergyman who taught at Eton.

New York saw this Irish comedy, soon after the London run, with Arnold Daly as the star. Daly, son of Irish parents and a real time office boy for Charles Frohman, was one of the best comedians the American stage has produced. ACTORS DO NOT ALWAYS CHOOSE SUITABLE ROLES

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Los Angeles, Nov. 19.

THE circus quirk in human nature that impels Charlie Chaplin to do a Hamlet instead of a Puck, and John Barrymore to imitate Douglas Fairbanks instead of playing his own excellent dramatic characterizations, has always been food for thought. It has aroused discussions from time to time as to whether or not the star should be permitted to choose his own payment in selecting his roles.

Irving Thalberg, who passes on more pass for write than any other young man of his age in the world, imparts the information and sympathetic response as to the roles he will assign to Norma, for a successful performance.

Pauline Frederick, one of the finest dramatic actresses the movie screen ever had, says she wants as many different roles in her celebrity wardrobe as possible. And the question of type never gets and bores young Ina Claire, who is delighted with the fact, of course, that she is [illegible] her own type. MARION DAVIES IN 'FAIR CO-ED' FILM AT STATE

MARION DAVIES in her new starring production, "The Fair Co-ed" an adaptation of the famous George Ade musical comedy of the same name, will be the chief screen attraction at Loew's State, beginning tomorrow.

The screen part of the action of this new picture, in which Miss Davies will appear as Cynthia Bright a young college student, was filmed at Claremont, near Pomona College, California.

While on location Miss Davies starred in practically all the action scenes, including class rushes, cane spree, celebrations, hazing, track and field meets and a comedy parade staged by the students as a protest against the school's ban on automobiles. Hundreds of students from various southern California colleges participated in the lavish scenes.

The interior sequences were filmed at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. The major interior scenes features a basketball game.

Sam Wood, who has been identified with several college pictures, directed the new comedy from an adaptation by Byron Morgan.

Johnny Mack Brown, former Alabama star half-back, has the featured male role opposite Miss Davies. Morley Drury, captain of the University of California 1927 football team, is in the cast.

Well-known screen players supporting Miss Davies include Jane Winton, Thelma Hill, Lillian Leighton, Edward Connelly and George Cooper.

Ed Hall and his Carolina Nighthawks, in a jazz program, top the stage offering.

"PEGGY-ANN" ANOTHER VANDERBILT SUCCESS

The Wilbur will have for its attraction on Monday, November 28, the latest Vanderbilt success "Peggy-Ann," with Helen Ford at the head of the company.

Helen Ford

The Vanderbilt has been extremely lucky in its selection of entertainments, beginning with "Irene" and following with "My Girl," "Merry Go Round," "Merry Merry," "Pa" and other hits. "Peggy-Ann" has been one of the big Broadway hits for months.

The original company supporting Miss Ford includes Lulu McConnell, Betty Starbuck, Marion Trabue, Gertrude Lowe, June O'Dea, Louise Joyce, Lester Cole, Fuller Mellish, Jr., Patrick Rafferty, Murray Jay Queen and others. There is also a large chorus of dancers and dancers.

Herbert Fields wrote the book, Richard Rodgers the music and Lorenz Hart the lyrics. Lew Fields and Lyle D. Andrews are the producers.

LUCAS SCORES IN DETECTIVE ROLE

As the scapegrace nephew in Marcy Hill," Rupert Lucas established his popularity with the Copley company, of which he is a comparatively new member. Now he is scoring in an entirely different role as the detective who keeps his identity a mystery through three acts of "Oh, I." This new thriller enters its fourth week tomorrow at E. E. Clive's playhouse in the popular management house playing the star role as an inebriated sailor.

Lucas has been acting on this side of the Atlantic for three years. He had a season with a repertoire company in Canada, and then made his Broadway debut in "The Honest Liars" in 1926. He also played with Enid Markey in "The Bonds Sinners."

Born in Lancashire, England, the young actor went to college at Westminster, where he made languages a specialty, studying Italian, French, Spanish, German and Russian. Later he studied music under a French instructor.

Lucas is the son of an English actor whose name is well known on the British stage for more than thirty years. Young Lucas made his stage debut with the Manchester Guild in England later playing Romeo and other Shakespearean roles.

RICHARD DIX FENWAY STAR

Richard Dix in "Shanghai Bound," and Irene Rich in "The Desired Woman," are featured stars at the Fenway until Wednesday. Mr. Dix's latest melodrama takes him to China, where he is the captain of a rumshackle river steamer. Mary Brian plays the lady in the case and Joseph Levis is first assistant. River pirates, revolutionary armies, and other troubles make life anything but easy for the star. "The Desired Woman" is a desert drama with William Collier, Jr., and Wilfred Russel as the male participants.

On Wednesday, Dix will make his debut on the screen with his screen version of "Manon Lescaut," now entitled "When a Man Loves," and gazing its star a fine opportunity to cross swords with gentlemen of the French court, ride across the Atlantic in a convict ship, and at last to escape to Louisiana with Dolores Costello as his fair companion. On the same bill Ted Grame makes his appearance as a "Boxing Romeo" in the film of that name, with Johnny Ralston as his manager and Walter Hiers as chief comedian.

SYDNEY SHIELDS IN "RED DUST"

"Red Dust," a new play by Wilson Collison, will open at the Arlington Dec. 12, following "In Abraham's Bosom." Sydney Shields is the featured player in "Red Dust," which is being produced by Sigmund Romberg. It is not a musical show, however, but a drama.

Pride of the Campus

MARION DAVIES is the star of "The Fair Co-ed," the Cosmopolitan picture of college life opening tomorrow at Loew's State.

PRISON DRAMA

James Cruze now an associate producer with Cecil B. DeMille, will film "The Red Marg," a dramatic tale of the New Caledonia prison colony, from a story by John Russell.

CIRCUS EXPERT

Besides costarring with W. C. Fields in "The Side Show," Chester Conklin is acting as technical director. The white mustache comedian spent several years as circus clown in his youth.

SHIRLEY MASON AS ALLEY WAIF

MANSION settings vie with tenement backgrounds in "Sally in Our Alley," a Columbia Picture starring Shirley Mason at the Modern and Beacon. The heroine is reared in a tenement "alley," making her home with three foster-fathers, a Scotchman, a Jew and an Italian. Then she is transformed to a wealthy aunt's home that is in sharp contrast to her earlier environment. Miss Mason has played many "waif" roles and is unusually winsome as Sally.

"Jaws of Death," which features Rin Tin Tin, the famous movie dog, is the associate picture at both theatres. It is a story of love, young prospectors, adventure and desert gold. In support are Jason Rolands, Helen Ferguson, Baby Mary Louise Miller and other popular players.

The Vitaphone offering consists of John Charles Thomas, celebrated American baritone, Reb Spikes and his Follies entertainers, and Aunt Jemima, favorite black-face comedian.

LAST TIMES FOR "LES MISERABLES"

In cutting down "Les Miserables," showing for the last times at the Capitol today, Carl Laemmle's film experts were confronted with the monumental task of condensing four nights' entertainment into a dozen reels. All over Europe, the Hugo epic was shown on four successive nights, one part a night, and for some time the Universal company mutilated showing the Americanized version of the French film in two parts.

When this was deemed inadvisable, the film cutters got to work with the result, it is said, that though a good deal of the Hugo thesis of necessity, been omitted, the highlights still grand out. So ex cellent a job did they do that it is said Hugo would be pro ud of any particular place in which the film has been cut. The convict scenes, the cure and his curious like the rise of Je n Valjean to mayor and the touch ing incident of Little Cosette and the doll, are all shown, as well as the fa ling in the barricades and the romance between Marius and the h

MARY HARRELSON is the featured dancer in "Foolin' Around," new Gayety show.

"FOOLIN' AROUND" NEW GAYETY SHOW

Two comedians, Bill Mecan and Lew Lewis are the high lights of Fred Clark's new show "Foolin Around" this week at the Gayety. In association with William K. Wells, Mr. Clark has acted in the capacity of burlesque which is said to afford almost continuous laughter. Wen Miller, Al Wiser and Ralph Vincent, complete the roster of male favorites, while the feminine side of the cast lists Jeanne Steele, soubrette, Jane Mitchell comedienne, Irene Mon rose prima donna, and Mary Harrison, ingenue dancer.

Special vaudeville features 1st Mann ... Wiser, Lewis pers, hat throwers and John Gilbert, wonder ... and vocalist.

Jazzy Stepper

MERRY WHIRL' CASINO FEATURE

RT GARDNER and Dolly Lewis two stars well known Boston will be featured performers of the "Merry Whirl" which comes to Waldron's Casino next week. They have gathered around them a throng of associates including a dozen stunning ingenue chorus girls. Cavanaugh, a comedian, who returned from the English music halls in the show company, is another of the unusual list of entertainers.

Tom Dawson and Dona Lee are to offer comedy in the vaudeville stage will present their own novelty act. Others featuring the general vaudeville Jack Mann and Irish tenor, Rose Shaw is making a specialty for the opening of the vaudeville portion of the show. Miss Shaw is the only girl in the show who has a score of solos. The girls were selected for their ability to sing and dance as well as appearance, figures beyond reproach.

Chaney Wears Silk Hat in New Role

LON CHANEY has started work on the first role in which he has had to keep his trousers pressed.

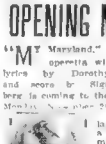
Quite the fashion-plate is Chaney in his latest characterization. Tweed suit, cane, spats, pearl grey hat and gloves spectacles—these are some of the details of his wardrobe as a Scotland Yard detective in London. He'd never get a "tec" for a stool in his locality of an afternoon.

Chaney plays a Scotland Yard detective using hypnotism as a means of solving several mystery plots in "The Hypnotist," his new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, directed by Jed Leo.

He plays a regular Scotland Yard man—well dressed and much like a human being. He never dons the disguises of a master criminal. Of course, he has a chance in several other disguises in the role and will be unlike in a strange make-up for each. In one masquerade as a cripple he wears a wig, false nose, spectacles, a quick doctor, healing compound and a hump.

'MY MARYLAND' OPENING NOV. 28

"My Maryland," the patriotic operetta with book and lyrics by Dorothy Donnelly and score by Sigmund Romberg is coming to the Shubert on Monday, November 28.



My Maryland has had a record ten months run at the Lyric Theatre, Philadelphia. Sixteen members of the original company will appear in the Boston production.

NEWS of INTEREST to SOCIETY

Interesting Notes Concerning Society

MISS CLARA PEET, who spends most of her time in southern France, where she has a charming villa, is in Boston for her winter visit to relatives and friends. The first of the month she has been with her stepdaughter, Mrs. Gardiner Perry, at the Commodore Place, "Gateway to Imperial Walpole Way." In early January Miss Perry plans to go to West Palm Beach to be with Mrs. Lloyd Perry, wife of the late Commodore Perry, and their daughter, Miss Mabel Perry, who make their home at the Whitehall Arms in Palm Beach and Aiken.

Mrs. Gardiner Perry is receiving her country guests over Sunday for week-end visits, among them Miss Lilla Peck and Miss Beatrice Peck, who have been spending some time at the Whitehall Arms in West Palm Beach. Miss Peck is also planning to have an exhibition of her paintings in an interesting event which is to be one of the artistic events of the season. Her portrait of Mrs. Gardiner Perry and pictures of Mr. and Mrs. William Amory Gardiner are the subject of much comment.

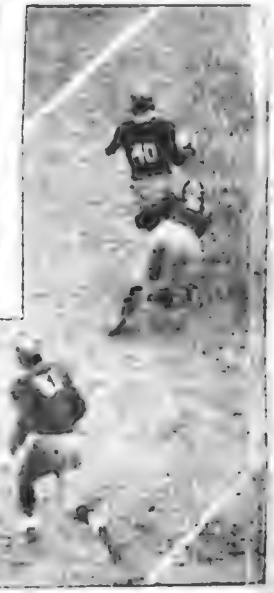
YALE BEATS HARVARD BY 14 TO 0 SCORE

Garvey Is Hero at Stadium; Charlesworth Breaks Leg; Holy Cross Wins From B. U., 19-0; B. C. Beats Conn. Aggies



LANDING IN THE HALL OF FAME. Garvey at end of 32 yard run for first Yale touchdown at the Stadium yesterday. Yale won, 14 to 0.

YALE ENDS ENDED most of Harvard's thrusts around the end. Guarnaccia, somewhere in the pile, went only two yards before the Yale avalanche hit him and crushed him to the turf.

STARTING ON THE ROAD TO GLORY. Garvey, No. 40, starting 32 yard run for Yale's first touchdown against Harvard yesterday. This play really broke Harvard's spirit.

YALE UNDERSTOOD FRENCH. Harvard's star back was not able to get away for many substantial gains through Yale. Above photo shows him at left, starting an end run that was stopped 5 yards later by Garvey.

Maroon and Gold Grid Warriors Meet With Stubborn Resistance From Start

By JOHN B. GILOOLY

[illegible] field was at that kept Boston Col[illegible] Connecticut Aggie [illegible] noon. Soaking all over Clarkin Field the Eagles managed to chalk up three touchdowns and kick one point after touchdown for a 19 to 0 victory over the Aggies, who fought hard all afternoon, although greatly outclassed.

Big Bud Dower, whose weight was a great advantage on the slippery turf, was the hero of the day for Boston College. Dower scored two touchdowns and kicked the only point after the three Eagle tallies.

Paddy Creedon, Al Weston and Tom Smith started in the backfield [illegible] Creedon ripped off a [illegible] gain and Smith went over for a touchdown.

But with the Holy Cross game just a week away, Daley did not want to take any chance. He yanked Creedon and Weston at the start of the second period and kept them on the bench for the rest of the game.

COACH DALEY PLEASED.

Boston College starting backfield was responsible for the first Eagle touchdown. Frydal punted to Dower, who managed to pull himself through the mud for 10 yards before being downed on the Aggie 49-yard line.

Weston tossed a flat pass to Charley Murphy for a total gain of ten more yards. Paddy Creedon add off tackle for 12 yards and Tom Smith landed the ball on the Aggie 2-yard line on the next play.

Smith tucked the ball under his arm and bent the Connecticut line before him for a score. Pete Herman tried for the point, bu the wind was too strong and carried the ball far from the uprights.

Boston College brought the total to 13 early in the second period. The Eagles, by some straight line plunging ahead, brought the ball to the Aggie 5-yard line for a first down. The Aggie line strengthened, however, and held the powerful B. C. backfield for downs on their 1-yard line. B. C. was not to be denied, though.

MURPHY BLOCKS PUNT.

Frydal put on behind his goal line to punt out of danger. Charley Murphy broke through and got in the way of the ball. Lenard Lenard pounced on the oval on the Aggie one-yard line. Dower banged his way through the center of the Aggie line for a touchdown on the next play.

Coach Daley had most of his second team in for the second half and sent his regulars to the showers.

The Eagle subs waded through the third period without letting the Aggie team get any headway. Coach Daley was surprised in the final session when his second club cut loose and brought the total up to 19 points for B. C.

It was fourth down and B. C. had the ball on the Conn. 27-yard stripe. Ted Dickson [illegible] back to the [illegible] and buried a long [illegible] between the uprights, splashed his way five yards, missing a touchdown by inches. Bud Dower banged over for the third Eagle touchdown on the next play and then kicked the point safely.

TUFTS WINS FROM AGGIES

Amherst, Nov. 19 (N 81).—Tufts won, 19 to 7, the only undefeated and untied team in the East today when the Jumbos closed its season with a 32 to 6 victory over Massachusetts Aggies.

Including today's score, Tufts had a total of 218 points for the season. Only three times was the Medford team's goal line crossed during the year.

A 60-yard jaunt by "Red" Marshall started Tufts off. Marshall grabbed a punt by Bowie, which touched Hodquist of M. A. C., to score early in the first period. Fitzgerald missed the try for the extra point.

Marshall duplicated this feat in the second period. Hillyard left the ball down before the referee's whistle had blown and "Galloping Red" trotted 65 yards with the loose ball and the Tufts maroon stretched to 12-0 as the extra point failed.

At the start of the second period Fred "Dish" Glis, diminutive Tufts quarterback, heaved a long forward pass to Captain Bowker and another Jumbo touchdown was chalked up. This time "Hiney" made the extra point.

Fred Kennedy, Hingston and Ellis ploughed fight through the Aggies' line at the start of the third period and the ball soon reared on the 10-yard mark where Hingston plunged over.

Once more the battering Jumbo backfield ripped their way through the M. A. C. line and Ellis ended the scoring when he knifed through for a touchdown from the one-yard line. Tufts threatened in second [illegible] into the fray in the last quarter and Minor, Aggies finally chalked up a touchdown.

Captain Cook was the only ground gainer in the Aggie back field.

QUINCY LOSES TO BROCKTON

Brockton, Nov. 19.—Quincy High offered but little resistance to Brockton this afternoon and took a 19 to 0 beating before 4,000 fans at Keith Field. Brockton sent in its second team at the start of the game, but before the first period was over Coach Roberts shot in his first string men.

Early in the second period Philly O'Connell won over for the first touchdown from the four-yard line.

Late in the same period, Brockton received a Quincy punt on its own 40-yard line and on the next play O'connell broke through and ran 60 yards for the second touchdown.

The third score came in the fourth period, Captain Balcurnos going over after Keith had received a Quincy punt on the 36 yard line and successive rushes by Connors and Cook led to the five-yard stripe.

Quincy had but one real chance in the second half.

N. Y. GIANTS WIN, 33 TO 7

The New York Giants brought a brand of football into Boston yesterday that was seemingly foreign to the powerful Pere Marquette semi-professional team. The visiting professionals amazed most everything that Pere Marquette had to offer, defeating the local team, 33 to 7. It is the first time this year that the Pere Marquette team has been defeated.

The Giants looked tremendous against the Pere Marquette eleven and the game had not been in play long in the first period before loose running of scrubbies Meier started towards the first tally for the visitors by making a sensational 25-yard run. In less than six plays after the period had opened the Giants scored.

Though the Pere Marquette eleven experienced defeat there was nevertheless some spectacular plays embodied in the team's gallant effort to maintain the undefeated record. The only touchdown, coming in the second period, was executed with machinelike precision. A forward pass from Kittridge found Wentworth on the receiving end, over the goal line. Wentworth then kicked the goal.

As the fourth period was in the last minute to play the spectacular run of the game, made by Kittridge, was pulled. Kittridge broke away aided by great defense, and ran the ball 53 yards into the Giants' territory. The lack of time to play prevented a second tally for the Pere Marquette team.

The line more in on most of the aerial attempts made by Pere Marquette, but this was not the case when the visitors [illegible] in their efforts to gain.

ARMY BEST BY TWO TALLIES

West Point, N. Y., Nov. 19.—Army wound up its home season today with a victory over Drexiua, 13 to 0. The Cadets scored two touchdowns, their second coming when Bryan rushed into the fray at the opening of the second quarter to get the score.

Piper, who was going on by fine running around [illegible] end, vied with Henry Wilson in an advance from midfield to the Cadets' first touchdown. Piper ran 16 yards for the score.

Army's other tally came after Draper, who was a [illegible] work today, had carried the ball on successive plays in 22-yard, 12-yard and ten-yard gains to cross the final chalk mark on a dash off tackle.

Doubleheader for Lynn Junior Teams

Pickering and Eastern Junior High Schools were victors in a junior high school double-header between the four Lynn schools at the Lynn E. Berry Play ground. Pickering defeated the Cobbet Junior High, 12 to 6. Eastern beat Breed, 12 to 0.

TORONTO SIX WINNER, 4-2

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The Toronto Maple Leafs broke into the win column of the National Hockey League tonight when they defeated the Chicago Black Hawks, 4 to 2.

The Leafs outplayed the Hawks throughout. Scoring two goals for his team and playing a good defensive game, "Happy" Day was the star of the game. The other Leaf goals were scored by Carson and Cox, while Irwin and Brown tallied for Chicago.

90,000 SEE STANFORD WIN

Stanford, Cal., Nov. 19 (A.P.)—Stanford outfought California, its ancient football foe, for a 13 to 6 victory here today. It was an mighty a battle as ever waged between the two universities in 35 years of annual rivalry. Ninety thousand persons were thrilled by the intensity of struggle. Stanford rolled up the second touchdown late in the fourth period.

WALTHAM IS BEATEN, 12-0

Manchester High came down to Waltham and beat the Watch City eleven, 12 to 0. The Manchester eleven scored its first touchdown in the opening quarter and doubled the count in the final frame.

Although Waltham was reputed to have one of the best teams in the State, the Manchester boys were stronger on the line and in the back field.

Manchester recovered a fumbled punt on their own forty-yard line and Dougan, carrying the ball, shot off left tackle to Waltham's 32 yard line.

Reversing the field on a simular play, Dougan took the ball and with good interference, swept across the line for the first counter.

In the final period, after Manchester lost the ball on downs on the Watch City elevens one-yard line, Chandnoit of Waltham punted out to his own 38-yard line. Jones of Manchester, on a perfect lateral pass, got the ball down to the Waltham 13-yard line. Bonek then ripped through the line for five yards and in three more plays the Manchester team carried the oval across the goal line

St. James High Beats Worcester Saints, 37-0

Haverhill, Nov 19 — St. James High won its fourth consecutive victory this season by romping away from St. Peter's High of Worcester, 37 to 0. St. James remains among the undefeated schoolboy elevens of the State. After running up six touchdowns, St. James played a defensive game throughout, kicking every time when in possession of the ball. St. Peter's was so far outclassed that even with scored opportunities the team could not score. Beaudin scored four St. James touchdowns, Captain Sheriy was the outstanding player for St. Peter's.

PURPLE AND B. C. FROSH TIE

Boston College and Holy Cross Freshman teams played a 13 to 13 tie yesterday at Braves Field. It was the first football game between the frosh of both colleges under the new freshman rule.

The tackling of Morelli of B. C. and the receiving of passes by Byrne were the features of the game.

The B. C. freshman drew first blood a few minutes after the opening whistle. Holy Cross kicked off to Boston and after running back the kickoff to midfield Murphy plunged through the line for a gain of five yards. Colbert made 30 yards on a trick play and then Murphy brought the ball to the Holy Cross one-yard line on an off-tackle slant. Colbert went through center for a touchdown. Colbert missed the point after touchdown.

After an exchange of punts the Purple yearlings secured the ball at Mead 40 yard line on interception by the B. C. 30-yard line and a forward pass to Metzger put the ball on the 12-yard line from where Baker scored on three line smashes.

In the third period, two passes, Colbert to Anlos, brought the ball to the Purple 10-yard line, but line plunges failed to gain and the ball was lost on downs. Holy Cross kicked out of danger and B. C. started all over again. Three successive passes, one to Buckley and two to Anlos, scored a touchdown.

Up to the last five minutes of play the game seemed lost for Holy Cross Baker, however, started throwing passes to Byrne and four successful heaves scored the touchdown.

BROWN IN 31-13 WIN OVER N. H.

Malleable Iron Men Come Back and Beat Down Wild Cats Opposition

Providence, Nov. 19.—Showing a complete reversal of form against the extremely weak opposition of [illegible] the Brown University malleable iron men beaten in six of the eight preceding performances came back today and won from the Wild Cats 31 to 13. A crowd of 5000 watched Edwards and Cornaweet tear through the Granite starters line for all kinds of gains.

A 74-yard run by "Big Jim" Edwards, the Chicago flash in the early part of the second quarter for the third touchdown scored thrilled the stands and was one of the longest [illegible] seen in the [illegible] years.

[illegible] opened [illegible] Wilcox kicked [illegible] the first [illegible] for a score shortly after the game began Edwards smashing 13 yards for the score after carrying the oval the other 38 yards on four plays.

Cornaweet ended a 47-yard drive, near to close of the opening quarter, with an eight-yard line plunge after making 25 on one plunge at the start and a few [illegible]

[illegible] Merrill [illegible] with a 33-yard run in the second period after recovering a fumble punted to the end zone, but Treisbien intercepted on Brown's 7 yard line.

The Bruins ploughed to the New Hampshire 8 before being stopped, as John Shea of Manchester intercepted a pass and ran 92 yards for a score. He reversed his field three times in the journey.

Brown drove from the 25 after the kickoff for a score Werner crashing over at the end of the 70 yard drive.

Brown kicked off and Shea fumbled, running the ball back. Cornaweet recovered for Brown on behalf. Two rough plays and two plunges took the ball to the 5 yard line, but a pass failed in the end zone. Hodges punted to Edwards and Edwards passed its way to a second score. Shea to Hodges, being the longest toss of 26 yards. Shea kicked the point after touchdown.

TROJANS 27, COUGARS 0

Los Angeles, Nov. 19 (A.P.).—The football Trojans of Southern California, who take on Notre Dame at Chicago next week, defeated the Washington State Cougars 27 to 0.

Sporting the attack of Butcher Mc Mullen Metzger put the Trojans in drive speed merchant, the Trojans made a nice touchdown lead in the first period and were never headed. Battling in the heat of a sizzling mid-Summer day the teams were on nearly even terms until the third period when the game settled into a parade.

ILLINOIS CHAMPION

Columbus, O., Nov. 19.—Illinois gained its anticipated victory over Ohio State by 13 to 0 in the Ohio State Stadium today, and a more valid claim upon the Western Conference championship for 1927.

The victory finished the Illinois' Conference season with four victories against not the vestige of a defeat. Ohio State's figures finished with three victories and two defeats, but a very embarrassing tie with Indiana.

HOLY CROSS RUNS OVER TERRIERS, 19 TO 0

B. U. PUTS UP GAME STRUGGLE

Purple's Warriors Start Scoring in Opening Period In Surprise Attack

Worcester, Nov. 19—A snappy Boston University team had its hopes dashed today by Holy Cross when it went down to defeat 19 to 0. Dowling and Clancy, back in the ranks, led in the charge that carried the O'Donnell men to victory. Clancy directed the Purple's forward passing attack and one of his heaves to Larnowich led to a score in the second period.

During the first half the B. U. offence failed to function to advantage although Walke and Nelson managed to show creditably at times.

The south stands at the field have been given over to the use of Boston University and more than 3000 students and supporters of the team crowded the structure.

Holy Cross got away to a good start as soon as they got the ball. Donovan, Clancy and Miller alternated carrying the ball and in 4 minutes Clancy had dashed to take for a score. The Purple got the point after touchdown when Swenson was off side on the play after the score.

TERRIERS BRISTLE UP.

The Terrier then got its bristles up and gave the Purple a hard fight until late in the second period, when Clancy ran away around forward to Karpowich for another score. Phelan missed the kick.

B. U. came out fighting in the second half and by using Thurman exclusively it started a march that did not end until deep in Holy Cross territory. The break came when Clancy of Holy Cross grabbed a B. U. forward and dashed 50 yards before he was brought down.

The Purple stood a good chance of scoring at this period but Tripp of B. U. intercepted a forward and B. U. immediately punted to mid field.

Walke's punting was good throughout the game. Holy Cross started another march with Clancy and Donovan hitting the B. U. tackles which took them to the B. U. 50 yard line where Clancy got a forward to Altorini which Walke caught on his four yard line. A punt took the ball to mid field as the period ended.

BITTERS TERRIER LINE.

The visitors' line played inconsistently. During the first quarter Holy Cross rammed the ball at will to within four yards of the B. U. goal line where Donovan and Thornton were stopped four times without gain.

Strengthened by this break B. U. started a march and aided by 3 penalties the Terriers made three successive first downs that took the ball almost to midfield before Walke was forced to punt. Holy Cross then started an aerial attack that culminated in a score when Ryan hurled the ball 40 yards to Carnivelli for the first score.

Holy Cross rushed in almost a whole second team after this score. B. U. braved forward after receiving a pass attempt to score as the game ended.

MINNESOTA 13, MICHIGAN 7

Ann Arbor, Mich., Nov. 19 (I.N.S.)—Minnesota's powerful team crushed Michigan, 13 to 7, today, and had it hanging on [illegible] so to speak at the end. The [illegible] game from the Gophers [illegible] to overcome a seven to nothing lead which Michigan took on the first half by virtue of a 36 yard pass from Puck Ewarts to Oosterbaan followed by a goal after the touchdown.

Until the first half was over the Gophers showed signs of living up to a suspicion that they had a machine beautiful to behold but dumb. Then almost from the start of the third quarter, the machine seemed into action with a drive beside campaign that sent Jessing Arquist and Nydahl smashing [illegible] spearing 62 yards. Jessing [illegible] forty yards to Tanner on Michigan's one-yard line, then Jessing [illegible] through for a touchdown. Pharmer's try for goal from placement was bad, as a result of a poor pass from center. Michigan still led 7 to 6.

Undismayed, however, the Gophers went back to work and got the ball a min on Michigan's 44 yard line as a result of McKinnon's interception of a pass from Puck Ewarts. Once more Jessing, Almquist and Nydahl began that deadly battering of the line. On the 23-yard line at the start of the fourth period Almquist shot a pass to Maycraft beyond the goal line, and a moment later kicked the goal.

ond touchdown. The long drops of the old "Undertaker's Assist" death lunch to Harvard hopes, now cost the Yale section, gradually grayed in volume until it seemed to fill the entire stadium with the drummers in the band hammering their tom-toms in mournful accompaniment.

Charlesworth, the great centre of Yale, a mighty man on offense and defense all day, was stretched out in a scrimmage late in the game. One of his legs was broken.

Stretcher bearers hurriedly appeared, his form was covered with a blanket and he was carried out of the Stadium, while both cheering sections chanted his name.

YALE LEADS IN VICTORIES.

This was the last game of the season between teams of the disrupted old "Big Three," Yale, Harvard and Princeton, and Yale came out about the best team of the old Atlantic seaboard.

The game was supposed to be the football swan song of Tad Jones, the Yale coach. It is said he closed out his coaching career yesterday.

This was the first time Yale ever scored more than one touchdown against Harvard on Soldiers's Field, according to historians. It was the first time Yale made the two colors say it with a score of 7 to 0 in the matter of victories. Six games were tied.

It was just naturally all Yale Jones men cut the Crimson line to pieces and ran the ends at will. Wings. Toward the finish Harvard started chucking the ball around very loosely, gun bling against fourth down luck, but the fabric of Yale's superiority was always large.

FRENCH IN LONG RUN.

Guarnaccia and French did about as best work fo Harvard.

It was growing dusk over the field when Harvard opened a series of aerial passes, putting over three aerial passes in swift succession that gained 50 yards.

At the end of one, French stepped away on a 50-yard run that was halted only on Yale's 25-yard line with French a parently on his way to a more touchdown.

Another lateral pass to French produced a short gain, then a Harvard forward pass failed and the next play a Crimson runner was knocked over trying to run into Blue end. There passed Harvard's best chance to score.

Out on the field poured the Yale crowd headed by their band. They swooped down upon the goal posts and speedily dismantled it.

SNAKE DANCE IS HELD.

The band passed in front of the Harvard section to the strains of "Good Night," but the Crimson lungs made a valiant attempt to drown out that it calls its own but which really in "Those Endearing Young Charms."

The fragments of the goal posts were borne about the yard in a scattered series of snake dances, but gradually the crowd seeped out into the streets and thins passed the 1927 meeting of the greatest rivals in American college history.

HARVARD WINS YALE SHOOT

Harvard defeated Yale for the second time in twenty years when they met for their annual trap shooting contest yesterday at the Boston Gun Club, West Everett. The score being 464-173.

The low score was due to very unfavorable weather conditions high wind delaying the shooting of the gunners.

Capt. C. T. Coy of Harvard turned in the highest score, making 41 out of a possible 50 shots.

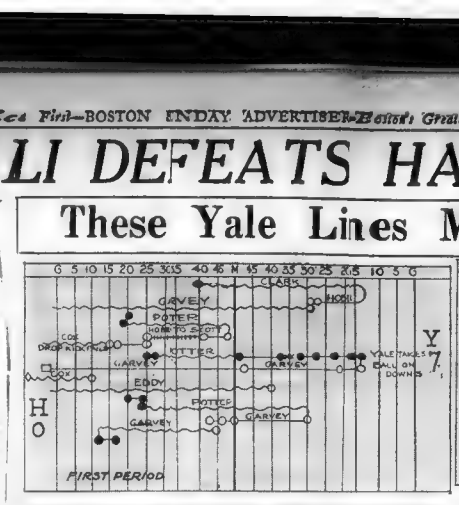
These Yale Lines Made Crimson Blue



Din Stilled in Tribute to Charlesworth

By JOE CASHMAN

A Yale rooter—a student from all appearances—died in a big raccoon coat and a white skull cap with a blue feather stuck in it, broke loose from the stands during the halves of the Harvard-Yale game.

For the next ten minutes he kept the crowd in a roar of laughter by his antics, leading the Harvard band through the t wirlish tomtoms, helping the Crimson cheer leaders in urging the spectators to sing, and finally attempting to lift up the goal posts as he was being led back to his place in the stand.

He farted a big hit and, show for local Harvard and Yale crowd, numbering 55,000, who sat in at yesterday's battle.

There are world series crowds, prize fight crowds race track crowds, college football crowds, and crowds at Harvard-Yale football games, but the Harvard-Yale crowd is different from all the rest.

There other meeting event makes no gallery, but no gallery makes the standard of the game. The football teams of the two institutions may be made the crowd is always the same, fashionable, colorful, enthusiastic, friendly and orderly in a superlative degree.

PLENTY OF CHEERING.

In only two respects was the crowd short of the four-square cheerfulness of the traditional rivals yesterday any different from its predecessors. It was a bit more enthusiastic and a little less colorful.

The Harvard or Yale fan is always enthusiastic. His training, environment and station in life demands that he restrain himself for the most part and he lets loose all this pent-up emotion once a year when the football representatives of his alma Mater face their most bitter enemy, but he was wilder than ever yesterday.

From the time the vanguard of the army of fans descended on the Stadium shortly after noon until long after the game was over and Yale had walked off with a victory and the goal posts and flags had been defeated, but never displayed, one loud, continual cheering was being emitted from both grands.

And I think that the crowd is not much thinner. The stands, the grands, dressed up in the height of fall sport wore none of the color of one of the other schools, were lacking.

The vogue of the fur coat is responsible. It isn't quite the proper thing to attend any big outdoor affair in these days without some sort of fur in these days without some sort of fur in these days without some sort of fur

TWO LUCKY BREAKS GIVE YALE THE VICTORY

HARVARD PRESSED ELI HARD

Crimson Team, Full of Fight, Threatened to Break Line Until the Last Minute

By NICK FLATLEY

Harvard almost pushed the song of the undertaker right down the throat of [illegible] New Haven morning yesterday. Harvard was beaten by Yale 15 to 0 [illegible] apart from two wild rushes of two of the pull hearers, Johnny Garvey and [illegible] Hammersley, Harvard was not as good as Yale.

Nick Flatley

In the first period Johnny Garvey, who was subbing for the famous Bruce Caldwell, got loose some six feet from midfield, on his own side, and rambled past the flying [illegible] of the Harvard defense for a [illegible] down.

[illegible] unperturbable Cox kicked an extra point into the records. Hammersley broke away 40 yards from the last Harvard line in the third period. He outfooted all [illegible] on a long was nailed, lifted hither and yon and eventually wound up back of the goal line. The imperturbable Cox kicked his second point into the records.

YALE LUCKY TWICE.

Yale won, 14 to 0, and Yale was lucky twice to elude the ferocious offense that a supposedly poor Harvard team offered against irresistible attack. Apart from those [illegible] wild and somewhat fortunate [illegible] the teams were as near as [illegible] certified foot rules you could [illegible] ever.

[illegible] Charlesworth Yale center, [illegible] candidate for the All-American [illegible] position, was the one serious casualty of the grim struggle. In the fourth period he was hit from [illegible] sides by Harvard interferers, seriously injured as "taking him out" of the play. His leg buckled under him and he writhed in pain, while the whole crowd paid him noisy tribute. He was carried off of the field on a [illegible] of [illegible] he pocket, but [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] today, for we know that Yale had won and that his Herculean efforts in the end [illegible] [illegible].

Very few conflicts in the autumn wars of these illustrious rivals have reached more bitter crucial stages in the hatred it [illegible] [illegible] thrills for the assembled thousands on the stands.

This game was the sort of battle that the prophets dream of—a give and take [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] probably would have roamed away on one of those tours had we been in close enough.

HARVARD HAD HEROES, TOO

But the Harvard heroes deserve their speed of praise, beaten though they were. Captain Charles Pratt stood out as the greatest all-man on the field, although he had competition with a flock of Yale marvels. The Harvard leader, in his [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

MALDEN BANGS OUT 20-0 WIN FROM HAVERHILL

LINE TOO STRONG FOR SHOE CITY

First Score Comes From a Pass That Looked Like a Try for Field Goal

Malden High's powerful line functioned like a big college team in its encounter with Haverhill High, scoring a 20 to 0 victory over the Shoe City eleven at the Pearl Street Stadium, Malden, yesterday. While the line was playing as one, the brilliant backfield of the Malden team battered, skirted and passed the Haverhill team into submission.

Though Medford is considered the "big objective" by every Malden fan, a win over Haverhill is next to it. These two teams have not met on the gridiron for the past seven years with honors about even.

In past games the victories was usually decided in the closing minutes of play. Yesterday it was evident from the start that Malden would be the victor. Haverhill, because of its infantile playing, a demic was powerless from the start. An early score and the Maroon and Gray chalked up three of the four touchdowns before the first half was brought down to the 22-yard line. Herwin stood look in kick formation. Instead of trying for a field goal, he hurled a pass to Walker, green, who walked across the goal for the first score.

The second Malden touchdown was made after a series of straight line bucks with Baxter and Wright, green doing the bulk of the carrying. The Haverhill line soon to stop the offense of the hard drill and sifted before the onslaught of the Malden backfield.

Baxter finally took the pigskin over from the one-yard line for the second Malden score.

Haverhill benefited by the 15-minute rest period and at the beginning of the instructions of Coach Mansfield and stiffened in the third and fourth periods.

Malden threatened on numerous occasions, but fumbles or just the fighting instinct of the Shoe City team held off a score. Haverhill opened up in the fourth period and started hurling a flock of forward passes with success. For a time it looked as if the game would be a scoreless affair.

But Roger Shea, the clever halfback of the Malden team, was the one of the Haverhill braves and ran 82 yards behind clever interference for the final touchdown. Shea's run was the longest seen on the Pearl Street stadium this season.

Melrose 11, Winchester 0. A W-whistler, 12 to 6, at Melrose yesterday afternoon, and the first championship of winning the Mystic Valley championship.

It was a hard fought battle all the way. In the first period a forward pass, Taylor to Murphy, gave Winchester its only touchdown.

Peter took the ball on his own 30-yard line and ran for the tying touchdown. Peter failed to kick the goal. In the final period Sherman tossed a pass to Malnlot at midfield and Malnlot gathered 30 yards for the second Melrose score.

New York Nats Take Newark Soccer Tilt, 2-1

New York, Nov. 19. — Charley Stoneham's New York National soccer team picked up two more American League points at Ridgefield Park today by defeating the Newark eleven by 2 to 1.

At the interval Newark led by 1 to 0, which was scored by Greenleaf. Ten minutes after the kickoff

St. John's Prep Victors Over St. Anselms, 6-0

St. John's Prep defeated its football rival, St. Anselm's Prep, 6 to 0, at Memorial Park, Lawrence, This game was played on neutral grounds at the request of the managers as to where the game would be played.

The lone score came late in the last period. A series of line plunges brought the ball down to the four yard line. Mullen at fullback, went over for the long touchdown. The point after was missed.

Syracuse Noses Out Niagara Eleven, 13-6

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 19 (A P.)—Hal Baughman Syracuse passing ace, beat Niagara today with two plays. In the third period he tossed 40 yards into the arms of Levis, who stood across the goal line. In the fourth quarter, with the score 6 and 6, Baughman passed 5 yards to Goldman on the two-yard line from where Barbuti hucked for the touchdown that gave the Orange a 13 to 6 decision.

THE 5:10 train for a Certain Suburb clicks along at 35 miles an hour. It reaches the grade crossing a mile from a Certain Suburb at 5:30. At 5.31 an inbound express thunders over the same crossing.

It is the duty of the engineer to sound the locomotive whistle. A simple task. It is the duty of the crossing tender to lower the gates. An important but not spectacular assignment.

One night last week, as the headlight of the out-train cut the darkness around the curve, the crossing tender came out of his shanty. He started toward the gates. A touch of vertigo seized him. He fell forward on his face.

The warning shriek of the locomotive pierced his consciousness. The crossing tender crawled to his gates. His will roused his lagging body. He fumbled in the darkness. He released the mechanism of the gates and they swooped down, fending pedestrians and autoists from the onrushing train.

The crossing tender had carried out his assignment. He had done the task. He had proven himself an iron man. But this is the only publicity he will receive, for his deed was not accomplished before the multitude.

THE headlines, the photographs, the interviews, the word pictures are reserved for the iron men of sport. But iron men always have been with us. There were iron men in Bible times. Methuselah persisted for nine hundred and ninety years, absorbing an amazing amount of punishment.

Bill Tilden, whose mileage on the tennis courts, if placed end to end, would reach from here to goodness knows where. Below, William H. Busch, who ran 3,400 miles in 65 days.

Later there was Wellington, the Iron Duke. And there was Aaron Gould, who left his plow in Guild square, Norwood, sifted over to Lexington and horned in on the argument with the British which took place on April 19, 1775

Aaron was an iron man. But the story of Aaron Gould of Lexington is a long, long way to go and that was before the days of hitch hiking.

The iron men of sport are the descendants of the iron men of yore. They have a steadfast spirit plus a durable body.

We have the Iron men of the Brown eleven of 1926. A noble and gallant crew. We have had this season the somewhat discredited survivors of that eleven They have taken their lickings and not whimpered.

Passed quickly to baseball, we have Iron Man Joe McGinnity He was a real tough guy, a pitcher more durable than McGinty. An iron man who went down to the bottom of the sea. The national pastime today is full of iron men. It has its Ed Walshes Everett Scotts and others too numerous to mention.

LONG distance running has its Clarence DeMar. Tennis has its Bill Tilden. Six-day bicycle racing has its Reggie McNamara, who, on December 3, will antedate his 84th week-long grind in Madison Square Garden, New York.

William H. Busch of Boston who ran from Los Angeles at New York in 65 days, is another iron man. He ran into temperatures of 120 degrees and an auto ran into him. He swam the Colorado River and was caught in quicksand. He ran 55 miles in the rain, with the temperature near the freezing point. He ran all night when it was too hot to run in the daytime.

Iron men always have been iron men. There always will be. Some pessimists, however, are wondering if the men of brass of tin and even of papier mache are not getting more numerous.

EVERETT WINS CLOSE GAME

A 64 yard run by Waldy Dragoni on a disputed play gave Everett High School a 7 to 0 victory over Salem at Bertram Field, Salem Tuesday afternoon. This, but it was stopped by the quick action of the Salem people.

The disputed play came late in the third period. Salem started on its own 20-yard line after receiving the kickoff and by line plunges worked the ball to the field. A series of passes and the plunges brought the ball to Everett's 31-yard line.

On the next play Cassell of Salem fumbled, Dragoni broke through and took the ball. He remained there for a few seconds, "Red" Mooney, the referee, was on the other side of the field and it took him a few seconds to get over.

Dragoni got up and started to run. The Salem men let him go, believing the whistle had blown and the [illegible] ran 64 yards without being touched.

A protest followed but it did no good. Referee Mooney claimed the ball was in play until the whistle blew.

The break gave Everett its victory although Salem cleanly outplayed Gilda's team. The first [illegible] was a punting duel and Foley of Salem cleanly outpunted Atwood of the team of Everett.

The last half contained all the thrills of the game. Salem started the [illegible] from the field but Everett recovered on its 37-yard line. The ball was recovered by Dragoni and [illegible] on the play for a long touchdown. Grottam made a extra point by a drop kick.

Salem almost got the touchdown back in the same period. Immediately after the touchdown, McMahon started banging away at Everett's line. Salem made seven first downs in succession with McMahon doing most of the rushing.

A pass from McMahon to Bilser went to the three-yard line. Bilser and [illegible] have easily gone over but he was [illegible] for [illegible]

Salem made a last attempt in the closing minutes of play. With McMahon bearing the brunt of the attack Salem carried the ball to the four-foot line but Everett held.

As soon as the game was over, followers of both teams swarmed on to get "Jack" Mooney out of the clutches of the officials.

BRUINS DEFEAT DETROIT

Hub Pro Sextet Is 5-2 Winner Over Cougars at Boston Arena

By BILL GRIMES

Boston's relentless fast attack in the second period, the Bruins put away the first victory of the season, downing Detroit, 5 to 2, last night at the Boston Arena.

The game was interesting because of the individual dashes of Eddie Shore, Bruins defenseman, George Hay and Jerry Shepperd, and the tango of much paying which creeped in from time to time.

It was soon evident that the local sextet had the edge on Detroit and it did not take long for the Bruins to get going.

FIRST PERIOD

Although the Bruins forced the play during the opening moments they were unable to find the scoring with a tally. Frank Fredericksen and Eddie Shore each had a chance on a solo dash but were stopped by Roy Worters, Detroit goalie.

Hay, Bruins speedy forward was just a step ahead of Bingo Ashe when he broke away for the first time, but was stopped by Joe Simpson, Detroit defenseman.

Hay had a hard whirl with Worters but they were too close to each other to score. Just as Soucy, Detroit forward, was about to break away with the disc Hay checked him and the puck went to the other end of the ice.

Fredericksen, Bruins forward, was given a free shot at the nets but Worters was on the job and the shot was blocked.

Hay and Shore carried the puck down the ice and Hay passed to Shore who was in front of the nets but Worters was on the job and the shot was blocked.

Shore and Harry Oliver [illegible] but Worters was on the job and saved. Shepperd [illegible] Hay passed to Shore who [illegible] Worters was on the job and saved

WORLD WIDE grasp of the automobile market is being sought with such unison by the various American manufacturers that European makers are losing the effect of the drive, was revealed here by W. S. Knudsen, Thomas Morris Motors, Ltd., of England.

While in Detroit Mr. Knudsen failed to take advantage of the offer of C. H. Sorensen, general manager of the Ford Motor Company, to inspect the Ford plant, he toured the Chevrolet entire assembly line in Detroit in other factories are employed in.

"The very optimistic business—I may add the word 'rosy'—is astonishing the general feeling of great business," Thomas said.

General Motors' increasing dominance of the automobile market will be seen by the announcement of total sales of the corporation in that will be made Monday. It was said by an official of the corporation that sales of General Motors for October will be the best ever recorded in it.

SHOULD CLEAN FUEL SYSTEM TWICE A YEAR

Foreign Matter Bound to Accumulate, Causing Engine to Misfire

By LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEER

A VERY large percentage of the cars on the road use the vacuum system for conveying the gasoline to the motor. The suction of the engine creates a vacuum in the tank forcing the gasoline from the main supply tank. Gasoline flows from the vacuum tank to the motor by gravity.

This vacuum tank, the carburetor and the main tank as well as the pipe lines that connect these units should be scrupulously clean. If not, the engine may be missing, or not developing its full power on the hills or under other wide open throttle conditions.

There are three things that it is always advisable to check over when buying a used car or when putting an older car in condition for a long trip. These are first, the gasoline system. Second, the steering gear. Third, the rear axle. Ordinarily all three of these are apt to be overlooked while attention is concentrated on the engine, brakes, tires and clutch.

UNDERSTANDING THE PARTS.

It is very easy to see why a person does a much better job of cleaning and adjusting a part or system of parts when he understands how these parts function. Very few motorists can actually explain the operation of a vacuum tank.

The vacuum tank consists of two chambers, the upper and lower, the upper being mounted within the lower. By an arrangement of valves operated by a float, the upper chamber is alternately connected to the intake passage above the throttle valve and to the atmosphere.

The chamber is at all times connected to the fuel tank and separated from the lower chamber by an automatic flapper valve which allows fuel to pass in only one direction, from the upper to the lower chamber. A pipe connects the lower chamber to the carburetor float chamber, through a shut off cock.

STRAINER KEEPS OUT DIRT

A strainer prevents the entrance of dirt in the incoming fuel and a drain plug is provided in the lower tank for the removal of any accumulation of sediment. This strainer should be cleaned occasionally and the drain plug removed and the tank flushed.

The action of the vacuum tank may be readily understood. When the float is down the atmospheric valve will be closed and the suction valve open, connecting the upper chamber to the intake passage, subjecting it to the same suction of the piston on the intake stroke that draws the mixture from the carburetor into the engine cylinder.

This suction exhausts the air from the upper chamber, closing the flapper valve to the lower chamber and drawing the fuel from the fuel tank into the upper chamber.

As this action depends upon having atmospheric pressure in the fuel tank, it is important that the vent of the filler cap be kept open at all times.

FUEL AND VALVES

As the level of the fuel raises in the upper chamber, the float lifts and when the chamber is full, the position of the valves is reversed, that is the suction from the atmospheric valve is open.

This shuts off the suction from the intake passage and allows atmospheric pressure to act on the fuel in the upper chamber. The suction is over, the flapper valve opens and the fuel flows from the upper to the lower tank by gravity.

As the fuel passes from the upper chamber, the float settles, the valves return to the original suction position, and the process is repeated. As the upper chamber is constantly open to the atmospheric pressure, the fuel flows from here to the carburetor entirely by gravity as required.

DENTS HINDER FLOW

As the action of the vacuum tank depends on suction and on a slight difference in pressure, it is very important that all pipes and connections in the fuel system must be kept tight and free from kinks or dents that might obstruct flow. All openings to the air must be kept free.

Every six months on your own car and certainly if you buy a used car, it will pay to flush out the differential housing and put in new oil. If the rear axle is noisy have the mesh of the pinion and ring gear checked by the best mechanic you can find.

It may be that a simple adjustment will cure the noise—but it takes the best type of automobile mechanic to do a good job on this as the mesh must be just right.

Also see that all play is out of the steering gear and that the gear and connections are well packed with grease.

SAYS HEAT WASTED FROM RADIATORS

"Motorists seldom think of their radiators as heat wastes, but that is exactly what they are," declares W. J. Connell, distributor for Pines Automatic Winterfront. "In Summer, for instance, the engine would get too hot, if it wasn't for the radiator.

"It wastes the excess heat developed by the motor and passes it to the atmosphere. Experts say as much as 40 per cent of the heat of the fuel is thrown away through the radiator.

"At 40 degrees F. a car must send air through the radiator at a speed of 20 miles an hour to keep the heat waste contained through the radiator."

LOWEST AGE LIMIT FOR DRIVING IS 14

Of the 48 States and the District of Columbia which issue drivers' licenses, the lowest age limit is 14 years, which occurs in three States, namely, California, Michigan and West Virginia.

Two States, namely, Connecticut and New York require the operator of an automobile to be 18 years of age, which is the highest minimum in any of the States requiring drivers' licenses. New York, however, issues junior operators' licenses to persons between 16 and 18 years of age.

RAILROADS' PLEA IS SPARE LOCOMOTIVES

The Canadian National Railways are complaining that there have been too many cases of the drivers of motor cars running into standing engines. According to the statement of the railroad, it appears to be a difficult matter to convince some motorists that it is impossible to drive locomotives into the ditch.

From another point of view, it is very unprofitable for motor drivers to hunt into locomotives owned by the Dominion of Canada.

FRENCH ROAD RULES JUMP AUTO MISHAPS

Automobile accidents in France are increasing in almost the same proportion as the number of cars. During the month of August motorists themselves were less inclined to blame the mounting accident list on careless ness and love of speed than upon the new rules of the road.

Under the old regulations the car on the main road had the right of way over vehicles on secondary routes. The new law gives priority of passage to the car coming from the right.

TIME SHORTENED IN CROSS-COUNTRY TRIP

Dr. H. N. Jackson of Brattleboro, Vt., is credited with having made the first transcontinental crossing in an automobile. He started from San Francisco May 23, 1903, and landed his two-cylinder car in New York sixty-four days later.

Ah Jenkins, who made the run from Tottenville, New York City, to San Francisco in September in three days, seven hours and forty minutes, now holds the ocean-to-ocean record.

Mary Garden Heads 'Family Party' Broadcast Offerings

NOTED ARTISTS APPEAR ON THE SAME PROGRAM

Cesare Sodero, Leo Carillo and Patrick Conway Are Among the Performers

The third General Motors "Family Party" which will be broadcast through the Red Network, beginning at 9:30 o'clock tomorrow night, will bring the voice of Mary Garden into the homes of radio listeners.

Miss Garden will be accompanied by a symphonic orchestra under the direction of Cesare Sodero, which will share with her the first group in the program.

Mary Garden.

As usual, the Family Party program is divided into three groups.

Leo Carillo, remembered for his creation of the boarding master in "Lombardi Ltd." will be master of ceremonies during the special period.

Lewis James, tenor; the Piano Twins, the Three Cheers, and Joe Green and his Revue Marimba Band, all of whom were featured in the opening General Motors Family Party, will be heard once more.

Patrick Conway, noted band master, will direct his band in four selections as the concluding group.

Sousa's "Thunderer March" arranged from "Semper Fidelis"; Herbert's "Sweethearts" Waltz; Lehar's "Merry Widow Waltz," and a Spanish ending is given to the program by a "Medley of Irish Reels."

C. Sodero

The complete program is as follows:

First group: Symphonic orchestra under direction of Cesare Sodero. Minuet (Boccherini), Blue Danube Waltz (Strauss), Barcarolle, from "Tales of Hoffmann" (Offenbach), Mark Gordon, soloist.

Second group: Revue, with Leo Carillo master of ceremonies, and Revue Marimba Band.

Third group: Band concert under direction of Patrick Conway. Thunder Men (Sousa), Airs from "Sunny," Merry Widow Waltz (Lehar), Medley of Irish Reels.

MARTEL TO PLAY PIANO NOVELTY

Arthur Martel, organist, will present a composition of his own today, at 12:15 o'clock, in the Metropolitan Theatre broadcast, from WNAC.

LISTENING IN

TWO opera stars will present themselves this week to the silent "Mike" and the vast audience beyond. One is Mary Garden and the other is the almost equally colorful Rosa Raisa. Mary Garden will sing solos tomorrow night in the "Family Party" broadcast and Rosa Raisa will sing Thursday in the Chicago Civic Opera program. Both broadcasts should be well worth hearing.

BARBER shop melody makers and others may be both entertained and educated by listening to the Sylvania Parade from WBZA on Wednesday night. The Foresters will harmonize some favorite quartet numbers in the manner that pleases.

SONGS that grow old but never lose their fresh appeal will be offered by the Parsons Quintet. Among them will be the following: "Old Black Joe," "My Darling Nelly Gray," "Dixie Land," "Sweet and Low," "Far Away" and "Home Sweet Home."

RED NICHOLS, with his Student Band, who provides "hot" numbers from WNAC and other stations on Friday nights shows a new wrinkle in directing his brass rythmns. Instead of standing in front of his orchestra, he sits in the middle of the group and, when somebody blows a "blue" note, he lumps up to set the melody right.

THE Weymouth Post 79 Legion band, now broadcast by twelve Red Network stations including WEEI, is attracting well deserved attention.

CONTRALTO TO SING TONIGHT

Kathryn Meisle, contralto, of the Chicago Civic Opera Company will be the featured artist of the Atwater Kent Hour, to be broadcast tonight beginning at 9:15 o'clock.

Assisted by an orchestra under Nathan Brainin, Miss Meisle will sing "Stride la vampa" from "Il Trovatore," "Voce di donna, o d'angelo" from "La Gioconda," and "Ah, Mon fils" from "La Prophete."

Miss Meisle will also sing three groups to piano accompaniments by Solon Alberti. The orchestra will play the "Dance of the Hours" from "La Gioconda," and "March," from "Symphony Classique" by Ilyitch.

This program will be broadcast by station WEEI in New England.

GYPSIES TO HOLD BAY STATE NIGHT

In the program dedicated to Massachusetts by the A. & P. Gypsies, to be broadcast through WEEI and other stations, beginning at 8:30 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time (7:30 o'clock, Central Standard Time) tomorrow evening, Nov. 21, Wilfred Glenn, bass, will be the featured soloist.

As a courtesy to Governor Fuller, "Estrellita" by La Forge, said to be a favorite of the Governor, has been added to the program. Besides three solos by Glenn, Rachmaninoff's "Levenarde" will also be played as a 'cello solo.

Other outstanding musical pieces on the program include Victor Herbert's "The Dream Melody," Tschaikowsky's "Romance in F Minor," which is of marked beauty, and Lladow's "Musical Snuff Box" which is known by many other titles.

Honeymoon Millions

By Stuart M. Emery

"Somehow the room seemed to be reeling about Kenneth as he lifted his eyes to the figure at the door. He took in the details of fiery cavalier bearing and flapping frock coat; snowy white linen gleamed as the Colonel showed his cuffs and stood erect as a preliminary to a bow that was something out of a court ritual of an elder day."

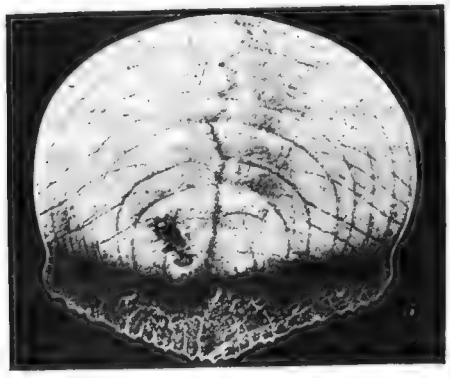
Science Finds that Nature Stamps Dates on Fish Scales, and Perhaps Everything Else



Enlarged Photograph of a Scale From a Herring, Showing Eight Winter Rings.

EVERYONE knows that the age of a tree can be told by the annual rings in the wood of its trunk, but not everyone knows that it is possible to do the same thing with a codfish or an oyster. Some other kinds of menfish, the dry-land rattlesnake, the beautiful antlered deer and probably many other creatures carry around with them, too, diaries which record the years of their lives. Even the mountains of Sweden and the marshy peat bogs of Greenland have been found to contain year-by-year records which are probably quite accurate as the average book of history. Nature keeps her own records, and keeps them well. And what is more to the point, that man should learn to read them.

The yearly record of the codfish or the oyster is kept on the scales. These scales enlarge slowly as the fish grows. The enlargement takes place usually at only one season of the year, just as does the growth of a tree. Accordingly, the alternate periods of growth and of no-growth produce a series of visible ridges or rings around the outer edge of each fish scale, exactly as the summer growth produces the annual rings of a tree trunk.

Fishermen and naturalists long ago noticed this fact about the scales of codfish, as well as of many other kinds of fish which live in the northern oceans, where the cold season interrupts growth for a time each year. It was natural to assume that each ring on the scale meant exactly one year in that fish's life. Five such rings would mean a fish exactly five years old. Unfortunately, the matter is not quite so simple. Sometimes the growth is interrupted more than once during the year, so that two or three rings may be formed in a single year. Recently, however, the experts who are studying fishery problems for the British Government have discovered how to distinguish these false rings from true ones.

The Age of This Ancient Waverly, Massachusetts, Oak, Which Was Cut Down Because of Infirmity, May Be Told by the Rings Circling From the Centre. Each Ring Represents a Year.

INT. NEWS REEL – PHOTO.

The Riddle of the Age of an Oyster Shell Are Nothing More Than Dates Stamped There by Nature.

A Rattle a Year Is Grown by Rattlesnakes and These Afford an Accurate Means of Calculating the Age of the Serpent.

To read the age of an oyster or of a clam or other shellfish the procedure is much the same, except that the shell is used instead of a scale. The baby oyster is a tiny, shell-encased creature less than a quarter of an inch long. Soon he decides to settle down somewhere for the rest of his life. He grows fast to the bottom, and thereafter he cannot move if he wants to. Each year's growth adds a visible rim of lime around the edge of the shell. These can be counted, as can the rings on fish scales, but with the same uncertainties.

Another ocean-dweller marks his years in a very different fashion. This is the [illegible] made famous by the popular [illegible] Oliver Wendell Holmes. [illegible] shell like a long [illegible] cone of a spiral. It contains a number of compartments, made by partitions built across the tube. The nautilus lives in the outside compartment. Each year he is believed to build a new one, closing up his last year's apartment forever.

A land creature that carries his age around with him is the rattlesnake, for each one of this venomous reptile's rattles is supposed to mark one year of his life. Unfortunately, the record is not always accurate, for one or two of the rattles may be shed accidentally when the snake moults his skin each year.

The number of prongs or "tines" on the antlers of a deer also indicate the age. These antlers, like the skin of the rattlesnake, are shed each year and re-grown, one extra tine growing in with the new set.

The shell of the turtle, which is really a kind of overgrown fish scale, may carry some record of age, but does not seem to have been studied from this viewpoint. The feathers of birds and the hair of higher animals and of man are also descendants of fish scales. They all show rings and mark indicative of growth, apparently are not capable of yielding an accurate count of years.

Perhaps the most interesting of all Nature calendars is that kept by the mountains of Sweden since the end of the great ice Age. The famous Swedish geologist, Baron de Geer, has discovered that the deposits on lake bottoms at the foot of these mountains contain many thin layers of clay of different colors, one layer on top of another. These layers turn out to be annual; one color of clay for the Summer, the other color for the Winter. From them the Baron has made a record going back more than 12,000 years.

Tragic and Mysterious Death of Youth Hoaxed by Sweetheart

HERBERT – PHOTO.

Miss Winnie Comyns, Who Has Been Selected as South Africa's Most Beautiful Girl.

VEDA BELLEFEUILLE, pretty, young, romantic, wanted to be "loved like heroines are loved in story books." Marshalltown, Iowa, where she lived, was hardly the place for wild adventures and knightly courtships. Marshalltown, Iowa, had its limits. But the lively imagination of Veda had none. In an attempt to bring about realization of her dream of romance she perpetrated a deception which was followed by the death of her Galahad.

To the rest of Marshalltown he was just plain Charlie Elrod, a nice young man [illegible] and Veda met some months ago. They fell in love. But the affair proceeded too quietly, too prosaically, to suit the sentimental Veda. She decided to fabricate the existence of rivals, designed to test the love of her true sweetheart and to [illegible] dear beau of hers.

Like the Frankenstein monster, the phantom lovers arose in the end to strike down the object dearest to their creator's heart.

For her imaginary suitors, rivals of Charlie, she had to find names. She selected nice ones out of books. One was Dexter Orton. Another was Keith Clayton Young. Elrod began to get letters from Messrs. Orton and Clayton. They told of their affection for Veda.

"I made it appear," admitted Veda tearfully when tragedy had ended her hoax, "that these imaginary characters were in love with me."

"Understand this," wrote Dexter Orton in his first letter to Elrod. "No man living can keep me from making Veda my wife. I have branded her for my own, and I intend that she shall be. My love is so intense that I would sell my soul a hundred times for a few caresses from her."

Half mad with desperation, Elrod gave up his job and devoted all his time to seeking out the mysterious men. His [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

How Count Salm and His Wife Arranged About the Baby

$350,000 Cash for the Noble Count, but Back and Forth Across the Ocean Little Peter Salm Must Go Every Year to Visit Papa Until He's Twenty-One—And He's Got to Learn German

Papa and Little Peter on the First Visit in Paris.

PARIS, Nov. 12.

IT has often been pointed out that in this era of easy-and-often divorces it is the innocent children who are frequently made to suffer while the parents hop gayly on to their next romance. And so it is in the recent divorce of Count Salm, the Austrian nobleman, and his former wife, Millicent Rogers, as revealed by an examination of the court records here, where the case was tried a few months ago, and from other sources of information.

The chief bone of contention was the $50,000,000 baby, who must stagger through life weighted down by the name Prince Alfred Constantin Maria Salm Von Hoogstraeten. Little Peter, now nearly three years old, has had his time very fairly apportioned out for him from now until he is twenty-one years old. In a lengthy legal document, reprinted in full elsewhere on this page, are the requirements Papa Ludwig insisted on and Mama Millicent has agreed to. This interesting document was the result of weeks of negotiations back and forth and many hours of fencing between the lawyers.

The disposition of Baby Peter having been finally settled, then came the question of how much of the Rogers fortune the noble Austrian ought to get. Count Salm held one pretty good card in his hand as he sat into the game—a possible suit against his wife's rich father for alienation of her affections.

Of course, Salm might not win a damage suit if he brought one, or the amount awarded him might not be very large. But there would be the unpleasant scandal, the publicity to the court record of letters, cablegrams and letters and other family revelations.

Some of Count Salm's friends were for the "nuisance value" of such a suit, but to be sport at least a million dollars. And so the lawyers negotiated back and forth, and finally Colonel Rogers agreed to pay and Salm agreed to accept $350,000—and that is exactly what he got after the usual deductions for lawyers' fees and their expenses. The Rogers lawyers, of course, received a formal promise from their client's distinguished son-in-law that he would not bring any suit for alienation of affections.

So Mr. Rogers' family got rid of the Count at a cost of $350,000—but he still has a string firmly tied to the $50,000,000 baby.

Salm married the Rogers heiress on January 8, 1924, and it was not many months before Millicent came home from her honeymoon trip, leaving her titled husband in Europe. In due time little Peter was born and Salm and his wife began sparring for divorce. The opening rounds of this legal battle took place in a New York court, but the large ears and wide-open eyes of the New York newspaper reporters were embarrassing—so the battleground was suddenly switched to Paris, where things are done more secretly.

Countess Salm began action in the French courts for a divorce and at the same time Count Salm started an action for separation. The two actions were lumped together by the judges and the Rogers heiress pleaded that soon after the marriage her husband began to show "a different character" and took "an offensive attitude" to his moneyed bride. He cruelly suggested that she should make her home in France, and, worse yet, turned out to have a fondness for travel. This "wandering life," Countess Salm declared, was intolerable because she could never enjoy any fixed home and family life. So unbearable indeed was this idea of living in Paris and traveling about that she finally separated from the Count.

Since that separation Countess Salm declared that her husband had always been indifferent to her, never provided for her legitimate needs, and she obliged her to constantly appeal to her family for financial help. Furthermore, she asserted that Salm had made "certain acquaintances" which were not desirable, and finally the Count had called her wife some unpleasant names. For all these various assorted reasons, the American heiress asked the courts to grant her a divorce.

When it came his turn, Count Salm had his little list of grievances all ready. He revealed the curious fact that his wife's real name is Marie Henriette and not Millicent, and that the heiress soon after marriage began to show "a selfish and despotic character." Indeed, she attempted to make her noble husband play a "secondary role." The Count reasoned with her, but in spite of all his efforts he was unable to induce his wife "to have a better conception of her obligations." He complained that Countess Salm had left him and had taken an independent residence in a hotel. He had summoned his wife to return to him, and in reply she had said: "I refuse formally to satisfy the present summons."

The French judges concluded that the heiress had made an excellent list of grievances and awarded a verdict granting Countess Salm's plea for divorce. They were influenced in their finding by a letter which Millicent produced from Count Salm, in which he said:

"I must tell you that it is useless that you correspond with me henceforth. The attitude which you and your family have adopted is such that I wonder how I could have lived so long with you.

"It is fortunate that everything is now finished between us—my life is henceforth arranged without you. I wish eagerly never again to see or hear about you."

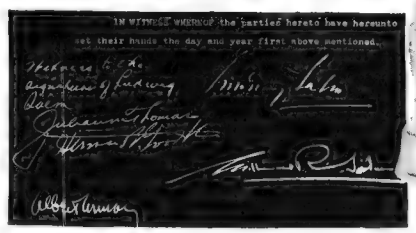
On the other hand, it was held that Count Salm had proved his charges against his wife, and especially the allegation that she had abandoned him. Her statement, "I refuse formally to satisfy the present summons," proved the abandonment, and this reply without any justifying statement was held to be an offense. Therefore, Count Salm's demand for a separation was justified. So the curious result was that both litigants won what they asked for—the wife got her divorce and the husband got his separation. But it is hard to see how Count Salm's separation victory was of any great value in view of his wife's winning her divorce.

The matter of the two suits being settled, the learned judges then turned their attention to little Peter, the $50,000,000 baby. The lawyers promptly announced that this had all been threshed out and a written agreement fixed up. Count Salm had put up a stiff fight against having his wife take the little one entirely out of the father's life, and after many conferences and concessions on the part of both father and mother, the following agreement had been drawn up and signed.

IT IS HEREBY AGREED as follows:

I. The general custody of the child shall remain with his mother, except as hereinafter provided.

II. The father shall have the right of visitation with, and the temporary custody of, said child in the State of New York, United States of America, during the period of one week (to be selected by him by reasonable notice in advance) in each month of every year after said child reaches the age of seven years until said child arrives at the age of twenty-one years; provided, however, that during the summer and winter months if said child should then be at his regular summer or winter home, such visitation and temporary custody of the father shall take place in the State or country of such regular summer or winter home.



Photostat Copy of Signatures of Count Ludwig Salm and Millicent R. Salm on the Agreement About the $50,000,000 Baby.

Little Peter Alfred Constantin Maria Salm Von Hoogstraeten.

Prior to the arrival of the child at the age of seven years and after he arrives at the age of [illegible] the father shall be entitled to have the child with him for two visitations in each of the four seasons of the year as a part of his visitation and temporary custody herein provided for but not in addition to it.

III. The mother shall during the spring or summer of the year 1927, and during the spring or summer of the year 1931, and during the spring or summer of the year 1933, take or send the child to Paris, France, for a visit there with his father of one month during said spring or summer. On the trip in 1927 the child shall be sent each day during the morning or at such time later as the father indicates with his nurse to the residence of the child's father in Paris, to be returned to the mother provided by the mother at or before the regular supper hour of the child that day.

On the trips in 1931 and 1933 the same procedure is to be followed on the trips in 1927, except that the mother may be at some recognized summer resort nearby Paris, in which event the child is to visit her, escorted by the father or [illegible] for each day as the father's trip in 1927. Mystery of the Vampire's Bite

Sleeping Explorers Attacked by Phantom Creatures Just Like the Victims of Mythical Demons —Without Being Awakened

The South American Vampire Bat, Which Lives on the Blood of Animals and Man, and Which, William Beebe, the Exploring Scientist, Says, Attacks Its Victims Without Awakening Them, Plugs Up the Wound Caused by Its Keen Fangs, and Sometimes Leaves Its Victims Dead.
Above—Head of a Vampire Bat, Showing Its Incisors, Used for Wounding Its Victim.

IN SONG and [illegible] countless generations, the story of the dread vampire bat and its human prototype, which existed on a diet of blood taken from the veins of victims while they slept; victims who did not awake while their life's blood was being drained from them, and who frequently [illegible] awoke [illegible].

But science has amused relatively little accurate data on the subject. That of South America vampire bat and kindred species actually are bloodsuckers, is a known fact. Yet owing to the fact that the vampire bat will never make an appearance while there is the slightest light about the victim, it has been extremely difficult to get any definite information on the subject.

William Beebe, noted explorer and naturalist, associate of the Zoological Society and [illegible] interest, is one of the few who has had first hand experience with vampire bats. There are two species, says Mr. Beebe, writing for the New York Zoological Bulletin, has been able to answer as a result of his research.

One is that, four times out of five, the vampire bat can bite its victim without awakening him. The other is that there are two methods of biting employed by the bat. One is the scoop method, in case of which part of the victim's wound continues to bleed. In the other method of biting, the wound stops bleeding after the bat has had his fill of blood, and then the bat pugs up the wound with a waxlike substance. [illegible] a bite scarcely ever awaken the victim, says Mr. Beebe, basing opinion on scores of cases observed.

Mr Beebe marvels most of all at the [illegible] vampire bat to [illegible] sound without waking his victim. He was so impressed by this that he experimented on sleeping persons with the finest of needle points, trying to draw a single drop of blood without awakening the sleeper, but in each case he failed.

The vampire bat does not seem to care where he gets his blood. In Western Mexico, Beebe tell of experiences with a vampire bat which attacked the horses.

"Each morning," he relates, "the horses showed evidence of visits from the bloodthirsty bats—long streaks of blood on their heads and shoulders." And in British Guiana, says Mr. Beebe, "Vampires were so abundant at Matope that every morning one of the servants collected the saddle cushions on the veranda and packed them under an upturned chair. Otherwise, the dogs, while sleeping on these cushions, would have ruined them with their blood."

The Rev. Walter G. White, a missionary, describing his experiences, wrote:

"The dogs kept by the Indians lose nearly all their pups, owing to the attacks of vampires. The mothers know how to roll over and brush off the horrid creatures; but they are helpless to save their pups. Our pet would run backward and forward from her yelling pups to the bedroom door, whining for us to come and remove the attacking horror.

"Fowls must be carefully protected at night in wire-net houses. Colts suffer severely. They become emaciated, and some of them succumb before they grow large enough to withstand the continual lancing. On one occasion, while asleep, I was attacked by a vampire. I knew nothing of it until the morning, when my attendant was called to a large patch of blood upon my hammock. Examination of my feet showed a round hole about the eighth of an inch in diameter and an eighth of an inch deep, on one of my big toes. The edge of the wound was regular."

Speaking of his personal experience with vampires, Mr. Beebe says:

"I have been bitten several times by the bats. On only two occasions did I awake and thereby lose more blood than could be contained in the thimble-sized stomach of the vampire. When the bat uses its bore bite the wound rarely bleeds. If the bat, undisturbed, completes its operation, not a drop of blood is wasted and no infection results. The wound is filled with a plug of soft, greenish matter, almost wax like. The exact nature of the coming, the reason why the sleeper [illegible] and the source and nature of the anticeptic plug are still matters for science to explain."

A study of the vampire bats explains how readily the ancients might have given credence to the myths and horror tales of the middle ages, the legends of deathless corpses and of werewolves, and of the human vampires of the type depicted in the celebrated painting "The Vampire," by Sir Edward Burne-Jones, based on many legends of the Dark Ages. Many of the vampire legends can be traced to the blood-sucking bat.

Reducing Kills Excess Weight

SO disastrous have been the results of starvation diets and other flesh-reducing treatments that physicians have become alarmed, and numerous warnings have been issued against synthetic reducing.

No physician, however, has frowned upon the method of weight reducing discovered by pretty Clara Wallucks, a Los Angeles girl, who found recently that she was [illegible] slowly slightly more curvaceous than the current modes dictate. Miss Wallucks has found her exercise most admirable for the harmonious development it gives to other women. However, to the present time, she has found [illegible] willing to do it. Perhaps [illegible] dreamboats than the [illegible] reduction routine.

[illegible] simple. All Miss Wallucks [illegible] is a kick [illegible] back and [illegible] with each foot. Twenty [illegible] each morning is the prescribed [illegible] this unique exercise, and [illegible] gram [illegible] look [illegible] out [illegible] hundred pound woman in a dozen treatments.

She got the idea, she said, from watching the antics of a clown at a recent circus.

"It's [illegible] Miss Wallucks, "but it certainly does take off the excess. I hate to diet, and I haven't got the patience to go through the usual course of rolling, call-boy rides and steaming that most women choose as the road to slimness."

In Los Angeles the women take their obesity much more seriously than they do anywhere else in the world. Almost every attempt [illegible] to the State of California has a weather eye turned to Hollywood, motion picture capital of the world, and the vocal chords of the smarter clubs which is contained [illegible] reducing contract, as follows:

"If the part of the second party [illegible] engaged [illegible] weighs [illegible] pound [illegible] agreement shall be considered terminated."

There it is, in black and white, a constant menace, a blunt warning: "Get fit and you lose your job." There is no [illegible] about [illegible]. No excuses permitted. [illegible] weight limit [illegible] managers for [illegible] female [illegible] is 150 pounds. The weight limit of some of the Hollywood movie stars, as specified in their contracts, are as follow:

Joyce Compton, 140 pounds; Anna Q. Nilsson, 142 pounds; Dorothy Mackaill 146 pounds; Blanche Sweet, 138 pounds; Dorothy Sebastian, 140. Unlike Miss Wallucks, they are content to keep within the limit of daily exercise of a milder nature.

Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association, in a recent article decried the "scourge of reduction which [illegible] many women to the hospital.

Trapped On Alpine Peak By Fa[illegible] B[illegible]

MANY a tragedy has been [illegible] on the snow-capped peaks of the Alps, but none more poignant than that which occurred recently on the mountains in a remote corner of southeastern France.

Raymond Bicknell, a wealthy brewer of Newcastle, England, had organized a mountain climbing expedition. His party included his son, Peter; Sir Joseph Napier and Arthur Proctor. After a long journey across the Alps from Switzerland, they arrived at the village of Valoire, in the Haut Savoie department, and paid off their Swiss guide. They decided to climb the Needle, a famous peak in the district, by a new route, and inasmuch as they were all experienced mountain climbers, they went without a guide. Sir Joseph, Proctor and young Peter Bicknell felt they were perfectly safe, inasmuch as Bicknell [illegible] was vice-president of the Alpine Club, an association of guides and professional Alpinists.

Here the way, followed by Sir Joseph, with Proctor third and Peter Bicknell bringing up in the rear. All were linked, a [illegible] custom in Alpine climbing, by a long rope. The progress of the journey was [illegible] until they got about half way up, when the way became exceedingly difficult. Bicknell called a halt. The other three [illegible] themselves on a rocky ledge, while he started along a narrow path with the purpose of exploring the road ahead. After a moment or two he called Sir Joseph, asking him to advance a few yards so that he could progress further.

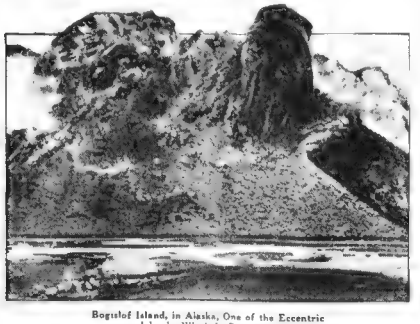
Sir Joseph started, followed by the other. Suddenly they heard a startled cry from Bicknell, and saw him drop over the rocks [illegible] of his vision. His fall dragged Sir Joseph forward a few feet, and Proctor and Peter behind him, but they managed to stop before they got to the edge. Although the weight of the man who had fallen was considerable, they managed, by bracing themselves, to obtain footholds. They got a view of the man at the end of the rope. He uttered not a sound, and the body [illegible] appeared inert. He was either unconscious or dead.

Dismissing the initial hysteria [illegible] excitement caused by the accident, the two men calmly discussed the situation. If Bicknell were dead it would manifestly be a dangerous and impracticable task to drag him up and then attempt to carry his body down the mountain.

Peter Bicknell climbed down, being held by the other two. At a distance of sixty yards, father and son hung suspended together on the two ends of the rope, their combined weight dragging against the resistance of the other two men. It required all their strength to keep from slipping and sending all four to certain death.

The younger Bicknell, making an examination of his father's body, [illegible] swam close to his own, found that he was dead. There was nothing else to do but cut the body down, which the son did, and he saw his father's corpse go hurtling several hundred feet down the crevasse. Sir Joseph and Proctor hauled Peter to the ledge, where he collapsed.

The body of Bicknell, covered with ice, lay in the crevasse for two weeks, when the ice melted and the body was recovered and buried in the town cemetery at Valoire.



Bogoslof Island, in Alaska, One of the Eccentric Islands, Which Is Constantly Changing Shape.

Islands That Appear—And Disappear

JUST as some animals are amphibian, equally at home on land or in sea, so, in certain parts of the Pacific Ocean there are volcano islands which periodically appear above the surface of the water, remain that way for a while, and then go below again. Such a one is Falcon Island, in the region of the Tonga Islands, which recently came up out of the water after being submerged for quite a while.

It was first detected coming up from the sea in 1885. Since then it has come up several times, usually accompanied by eruption of its volcano, disappeared after a while, and then reappeared. It gets its name from the fact that it was discovered by H. M. S. Falcon, being at that date no more than a reef, on which the waves broke. It is now a island about a mile long and four-fifths of a mile wide, its east and west sides sloping gradually up to a crater over 300 feet high.

The island is the top of a big volcano which rises from the ocean floor to a height of more than two miles.

With the history of the island one remarkable incident is connected. In 1877 dense clouds of smoke were seen rising from the sea where the above-mentioned reef (since disappeared) had been. The volcano's summit first rose into view in October, 1885, and just four years later it was surveyed by the British surveying vessel Egeria.

Another volcano island of the same type is the island of Bogoslof or Castle Island in Behring Sea. It is a volcanic mass first observed in 1796 after an eruption. In 1883 another eruption in the neighboring water threw up a new volcanic cone of black sand and ashes, known as New Bogoslof, or Fire Island, connected with Bogoslof by a low beach. Other islands which mode their appearance in the same manner have since disappeared.

Why Lazy People Live the Longest

MANY things that our grandfathers and grandmothers believed about good health and habits of life were true, although neither they nor the doctors of their generation knew the reason why.

It is not all the notions they held, and which the best medical opinions of the time indorsed, that have turned out to have a sound basis. Until very recent times, for instance, sun parlors were advised for convalescing sick people, so that they might get the beneficial advantage of sunshine. Modern science now knows that the so-called health rays of the sun are screened out by ordinary window glass, and that the doctors did not know.

And now it is suggested that perhaps there is something wrong about the widely accepted belief that good health and a ripe old age depend upon regular and more or less vigorous daily exercise.

For some time scientific investigators have been worried by the unquestionable fact that great athletes are not the people who live to notable old age. If the theory is sound that the heart and the muscles of the body need regular exercising, then how comes it that it is not the professional nor amateur athletes, but the quiet, undeveloped, scrawny little old men and women who are usually found in the centenarian group?

Why are the longest survivors of college classes not always the husky football players and members of the rowing crew, but oftentimes the men who took no more exercise than they had to, either in college or in after life?

Another outstanding fact proved by the statistics of the Federal Public Health Service and the United States Census Bureau is that women live longer than men. Of the two sexes, it is the male whose muscles are usually developed, who puts in his day with pick and shovel or lifting heavy commodities in mill, factory or commercial life, or, if he has a sedentary job, is likely to take some sort of regular exercise before or after office hours. The feminine sex, while some of them take part in strenuous work, are not the ones whose lungs and muscles are most developed. Here again it would be expected that the male sex, with its daily exercise and hard muscles, would show greater longevity than the other sex—but the reverse turns out to be true.

These significant facts have attracted attention and puzzled investigators, because they did not fit in with the theory that good health and long years were dependent on physical exercise. The many striking examples pointing directly to the contrary could not be explained away. Thus the late United States Senator William M. Evarts lived to the ripe old age of eighty-three, and his lifelong maxim was "never make any physical exertion which I can find any way to avoid." This distinguished and thoughtful man of affairs said many years ago:

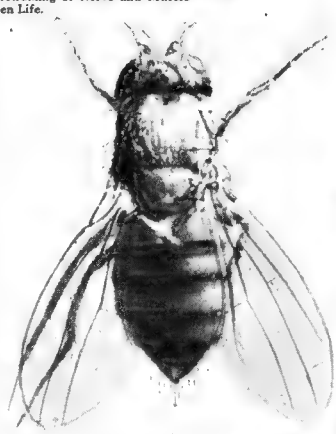
"I attribute my good health to the fact that I always get out of bed late and never take any physical exercise. I never walk a step which I can avoid. I do not even cross the street if this slight exertion can be escaped.

"Life depends largely upon the circulation of the blood through the body, and this ebb and flow of vitality and nourishment is dependent upon a pump which we call the heart," Mr. Evarts pointed out. "The heart is a muscle which works night and day. The more exercise we take, the harder it works. The human heart of any individual has only a certain number of heartbeats to its credit. If you squander these assets in sports or unnecessary exercises, or steps which can be avoided, you have just that less number of heartbeats left to last out your life."

The recent experiments of Prof Raymond Pearl, of Johns Hopkins University, have to some extent tended to show that the late Senator Evarts may have been more right than wrong. The popular phrase, "A short life and a merry one," probably expresses a fundamental scientific truth, not that the mere increment of life tends to shorten it, but the activity which is exhausted with such a life probably shortens it.

It was while working with hundreds of cantaloupe seeds growing in glass tubes and with thousands of tiny fruit flies living and dying in glass bottles, that Professor Pearl, one of America's foremost biologists, uncovered some simple rules of life which seem to apply almost equally well to the life of mankind.

What shortens it is activity. For the flies in their glass bottles, for the young seedlings of cantaloupe plants in their tubes, for men and women in the workaday world, the rule is the same. The faster one lives, the sooner one dies.



The Drosophilia Melanogaster (Greatly Magnified)—the Kind of Fly Used by Prof. Pearl in His Study of Populations.

Professor Pearl has been engaged for years on what he has made his life work, the study of what happens to populations. The population of the United States has been counted at ten-year intervals since the foundation of the Republic in what is called the census. These census figures show the gradual increase in the population of the country, in response both to the increasing number of births and the immigration of new individuals from other countries.

The desired and conscious acts of mankind, like the opening up of a new, unsettled country, operate to change the population figures which might be displayed if the purely biologic laws were operating undisturbed. For that reason Professor Pearl has attempted to work out some of the laws of populations with samples of small fruit flies instead of with the figures of the census.

The flies which he used are those called by scientists Dro-ophila Melanogaster, an insect already grown in large numbers in scientific laboratories for other biologic experiments. These flies are very tiny, so much so that a small microscope is necessary to see them properly. This makes it possible for many of them to live comfortably even in a small space. They are also very rapid in development and quick to die. The normal lifetime for one of these flies is about the same in days as a human lifetime is in years. A fly sixty days old is well beyond middle age; one that lives eighty days has far outlived most of his generation.

For samples of these flies Dr. Pearl created small artificial worlds, as though some powerful monarch should open a new continent for settlement by a few selected human beings and then sit by for a year to watch how its population grew. In convenient glass bottles Dr. Pearl put some of these small flies, usually of a carefully selected family. The bottles were provided, also, with a supply of synthetic food, consisting of a kind of jelly flavored with sugar and provided with the mineral salts needed by the flies. Yeast was allowed to grow on this jelly also, so that the flies could have some fresh "vegetable" food as well as the jelly. Having thus created a lot of tiny continents of flies, Dr. Pearl proceeded to study how the fly population in each bottle increased or decreased from week to week.

Dr. Raymond Pearl, of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore.

Because of the short lives of the insects, one "generation" in such a fly population was less than two weeks. In less than ten weeks most of the original flies would be dead. Within a few months it was possible to obtain information about the growth and decline of populations which would need centuries were it obtained by watching human populations. A few weeks ago, in a series of lectures at universities and scientific gatherings in Europe, Dr. Pearl reported some of the facts that the fly populations inside his bottles have taught him.

The most striking thing about them is the way in which these population statistics agree with what is known about human populations. For example, the death records of all civilized countries agree in showing that women live to a greater age than men. If the persons over one hundred years old in any country are counted, it is found that many more women than men are among them—in the United States women average to live four years longer than men. Exactly the same rule applies to Dr. Pearl's bottled flies. After the flies of one generation have grown old enough so that only a few are left alive, these survivors will be largely females. Virtually all the males will have died.

Another example of the similarity between the statistics for the flies and for mankind is seen when mortality curves are compared. The insurance companies prepare such curves regularly for the human population. They show the number of persons dying at each age in each year. Curves of the same kind can be prepared by taking the death data for the flies in days instead of in years.

Photograph of One of Dr. Pearl's Bottles of Fruit Flies in His Laboratory.

When this is done the fly curves and the human curves are seen to be almost exactly alike. Apparently there are deep-seated laws of living matter behind the growth of any kind of a "population," and these laws seem to be much the same no matter of what living creature the population is composed, whether it is made up of long-lived animals like man or short-lived ones like Dr. Pearl's flies.

With this similarity in all the most interesting of Dr. Pearl's conclusions is the one that the active fruit flies live first. Whether their lives are merry or not no one can know, but they are at least fast and vigorous. And they are short.

One definite experiment to show this fact appears in an experiment on the crowding of flies in bottles that are too small. Professor Pearl found, he reported in his European lectures, that a medium number of flies was the optimum for each size of bottle. If there were too few flies in the bottle their average life was shorter; if there were too many flies their lives were shorter too. As a human statistician would express it, a population of a moderate number of persons per square mile corresponded to the longest average life. Were the population either denser or less dense the longevity decreased.

The probable cause of this is activity. When there are only a few flies in the bottle each one has plenty of space. He is apt to be very active, as any pioneer is in an unsettled country. On the contrary, when there are too many flies, excess activity is probably necessary to keep out of the way of others and to obtain enough food for which other individuals are striving too. A moderate population, large enough to discourage too much activity but small enough to leave plenty of easily obtained food; that is the condition for least bodily activity and hence for longest average life.

The same correspondence between activity and length of life, a rule previously suspected by Dr. Pearl from his work on populations of other creatures than the fruit flies, was confirmed by the experiments on cantaloupe seeds. These seeds are just as human, of course, as are any other living creatures. The measure of their activity is not motion, for they move little, but in the amount of growth that they make in a day or in an hour. As before, Dr. Pearl found that the seeds that grew fastest lived for the shortest time. It is as though there were just so much of a vital energy of some kind in each living creature. If that energy is exhausted quickly by an active life the cantaloupe seed [illegible] quiet and [illegible] longer and the [illegible] old age. [illegible] extend these observations on [illegible] to human beings unless there were some direct evidence to support it. That there is such evidence obtainable from statistics on men themselves was reported by Dr. Pearl in one of his lectures in London. When the death rates of different occupations are compared for men and women over forty, it is found, Dr. Pearl said, that persons who have been all their lives in active occupations die at earlier average ages. The long-lived people are those, on the average, who have lived quietly and have expended little energy throughout their lives.

Dr. Pearl's own experiments prove, however, that activity or inactivity is not the only thing that control long life, or even the chief thing. It is merely one of two factors that seem to be the most important ones. The other one is heredity.

Some humorist has said that the best way to be successful in the world is to select a rich grandfather. He might equally well have said that the way to live long is to select a long-lived family into which to be born. Undoubtedly the greatest assurance of long life is to have sprung from long-lived ancestors.

For the fly populations in their little bottles this rule holds quite as generally as it does for men and women. Professor Pearl selected for his experiments on this point pairs of flies that were descended, respectively, from long-lived and from short lived families. These pairs he turned loose in untenanted bottles—insect Adams and Eves, each pair in its own Garden of Eden. He watched the lives of the progeny which each pair produced, tracing the strains through many generation-like separate races of men and women on isolated continents. Always the progeny of the long-lived parents proved also to be long lived; those of the short-lived parents died younger.

In a long-lived race, those individuals that are very active may die relatively soon; sooner than inactive individuals of a short-lived race. On the other hand members of a short-lived family may live long if they do nothing and conserve what vitality they have. To be sure, a long life one must [illegible] but one must keep quiet and avoid excitement into the bargain, that is if the flies in the bottles and men or women in the world are as much alike as it seems that they are. Scientific experiments seem to suggest that the new old phrase of "the survival of the fittest" may have to be changed to "the survival of the laziest."

The ringing of the fish market bell heralded the general beginning of the new day. Chaffering became general, and the loud cries of the tradesmen, swearing that their life's blood was being taken, clashed with the strident bargaining of the slave girls, buying the family dinner. The stall of the man selling odoriferous cheese was likely to be next to the stall of the man selling sweet honey of the best of Hymettus. And the motto in the market place was "let the buyer beware."

Like all highly civilized peoples, the Greeks liked to eat—and drink—good things, and the products mentioned comprised only a fraction of those sold on a pleasant market day in Athens. One old writer, just jotting down from memory, mentioned the following as always for sale in the Agora—meats of all kinds, onions and garlic, wine and fruit, peas and lentils, raw and cooked, bread baked in cylindrical loaves, cakes made after the manner of the East, bowls of all kinds, cups and craters, clothing and lamps.

Here and there in the market place, old women sold peas-porridge to the sweating servants and slaves, as "hot dogs" are sold today wherever Americans gather in large numbers.

The marketers were mostly men, for Greek women of standing considered it a disgrace to show themselves in the bargaining places, at least during the day. Order was preserved by market police, hard working persons with a rough from organized fight, setting
the
and measure, and having about as much fun as a New York traffic policeman on a parade day on the Avenue.

The financial district proper, where the American excavators expect to find most interesting records, coins of great historical value, and documents that will settle questions under discussion for more than twenty centuries, was known to the Greeks as the arcade of the Trapezitæ.

The Tower of the Winds, the shell of which is still standing, dominated the district. There were sun-dials on its facade, and a water clock inside.

As one would expect of the Greeks, business was a combination of an art and a science, and nothing so crude as barter, the exchange method of their backward contemporaries. The bankers and money-changers had their places of business in the arcade of the Trapezitæ, and their tables in a specially arranged court. They changed money for foreigners, lent money to solid citizens, received and issued letters of credit, and made collections for merchants and bankers of Egypt and Asia Minor. Through the crowd sauntered surgeons had their offices in the Agora, as did the quacks who flourished in the credulous days, and true and false healers worked side by side.

All the smart barber shops in town were also in the Agora, and in them perfumed dandies chattered nonsense to pass the time, and "big money men" from the Athenian stock market listened to endless homilies about the weather while they had their whiskers trimmed.

Philosophers and pottery venders rubbed elbows in the streets, and poets and publicans had long conferences over jugs of wine. And everywhere there was talk—the endless talk of the Athenians, who loved to gossip about the newest thing in theology or politics or sandals, and probably spent as much time disputing over the merits of the athletes of the time as the boys in modern barber shops do debating the respective abilities of Dempsey and Tunney, or Babe Ruth and the Wagner boys. The sometimes light but often brilliant talk that made Athens the intellectual centre of the universe, and then helped to bring about its downfall in the face of foes who did not talk much, but fought hard.

Trapezitæ was occupied by men who would today be termed family advisors. They were sedate gentlemen who gave tips upon the market, forecasts upon the weather, sage advice to spinsters seeking big interest and absolute security of investment, professional service to elderly persons wanting to make their wills.

Most of the fashionable physicians and

The excavators anticipate that relics of historical value will be found in the vicinity once dedicated to the Stoas, or porches, where the wise men of Greece discussed everything there was to discuss, and propounded many a problem that the master thinkers of the world have not yet solved.

Zeno was a "regular" on the porches and had a recognized following of young men who believed as he did in philosophy, politics and literature.

Socrates was an occasional visitor to the Stoas, old writers say, and on the days when he talked the streets were congested, as streets in the vicinity of Wall Street are congested at noon each pleasant day, when lusty voiced evangelists exhort the future Morgans and Vanderbilts to forget the things of this world and concentrate on the salvation of their souls.

It has been said that Socrates spent more time talking to shop keepers and flower girls and slaves than he did exchanging views with the wise men, when he went to the porches, and he defended himself on that score by saying one might learn, even from the unlearned.

Diogenes was a fixture of the Agora district, and not a popular one. The clerks of the money kings took delight in calling his "the Dog." It was in the money district, indeed, that Alexander the Great had his famous meeting with the philosopher. The young conqueror looked pityingly upon the homely and shabby thinker, who was sitting at the mouth of the tub in which he lived. Diogenes was looking even more disgusted than usual.

"Can't there something I can do for you?" the darling of fortune asked.

And Diogenes answered, coldly:

"Ay, you can stand out of my sunlight."

As the Athenians advanced along the road to true democracy, much of their political life was carried on in the Agora. It was there that the first juries of freemen were formed, to try their peers for crime against the State, or against their fellowmen. The jurors were paid three obols a day, about as much as the average man or small tradesman could earn. Then, as now, the rich and influential managed to evade jury duty, as a rule.

It is, in short, a fascinating bit of the past that is to be dug up at Athens, thanks to the generosity of the American millionaire. A little territory, not so large as the extreme downtown section of Manhattan. Yet to the man with a lively fancy, it is full of sages and statesmen, philosophers and poets, rakes and soldiers, friends and persecutors of the common people, merchant princes, fish mongers and flower girls. Even such girls as an impudent Athenian versifier of the long ago sang of when he wrote:

"Thou with the basket of roses (thyself a rose)

"What art selling? Roses? Thyself? Thy life, perchance, and thy rose together?"

They had all kinds of people in the Agora. It was a human place, and seems human even now.

Teacher Whipped Her Child; So She Whipped the Teacher

And Thus There Started a Tremendous Rumpus Which Has Upset a Kansas Village and Locked Up the School Girl's Mother in Jail for a Year—And the End Is Not Yet

Grace Thorson Shown Astride Her Pony, "Prince."

Mrs. Cecil Thorson, Mother of Grace, Who Is Serving One Year in Jail for Whipping the School Teacher Who Whipped Her Daughter.

The Little Town Schoolhouse in Powhattan, Kansas, Where the Trouble Began.

Miss Thelma Collins, the Nineteen-Year-Old School Teacher, Who Severely Whipped Grace Thorson and Was Thoroughly Well Whipped by Grace's Indignant Mother.

"What were those words you said?" Miss Collins, the Teacher, Demanded. "Get off that horse and come with me!"

IT was the word., "dam it, Prince, go on," uttered by a fourteen-year old school girl, that have caused an upheaval in the life of a Kansas community. They have caused a mother of two children to be locked up in the State penitentiary for a year.

They have caused the girl who uttered them to be sentenced to the State reformatory; a pretty nineteen-year-old school teacher to be threatened with a prison term, and a little four-year-old girl to ask, appealingly, "Why doesn't mamma come home?"

Mrs. Cecil Thorson, the mother, living on a farm near Powhattan, Kansas, was sent to the penitentiary for very thoroughly horsewhipping Miss Thelma Collins, the teacher of the village school. Miss Collins had aroused the anger of Mrs. Thorson by severely beating Grace, the fourteen-year-old daughter of Mrs. Thorson, with a heavy strap, after the teacher had heard the girl swear at Prince, her pony.

Delinquency charges were filed against Grace and she faces a term in the reform school

But Miss Collins, even though she beat the girl with a strap having a buckle at the end and studded with copper rivets, remains at liberty and continues to teach the school. The school board stands staunchly behind the teacher. It has purchased for her a length of hose in order that she may punish unruly pupils. One of the pupils remarked the day after the new weapon of punishment was delivered that "teacher is just itchin' for a chance to try it out on one of us."

After discovering that her daughter had been beaten, and after seeing the black and blue welts on her body, caused by the heavy strap and buckle, Mrs. Thorson set out to find the teacher. She carried a whip in one hand

The country schoolhouse was a mile from her home. She walked to the school had been dismissed for the day and Miss Collins was not there. The angry mother proceeded to the teacher's boarding-house, nearby. She was informed that the teacher was hunting for walnuts in a strip of woods

Brandishing the whip, Mrs. Thorson came upon the teacher, screamed, "I'll teach you how it feels to be whipped," ran forward frantically, and began to strike viciously at the young woman. After a few blows, Miss Collins closed in and grappled with the enraged mother. But she was no match for the full-grown woman. Mrs. Thorson dropped the whip and struck the teacher so vigorously on the cheek with her fist that she fell to the ground.

The girl staggered to her feet and attempted to protect herself. The mother then clawed and struck at her opponent until she had torn off the teacher's dress. After this, she struck the teacher again on the head, so that she fell into a small ravine nearby. Her vengeance partly appeased, Mrs. Thorson left, muttering to herself, while the girl made her way back to the boarding house as best she could.

The teacher filed a complaint and had Mrs. Thorson arrested for assault and battery. The fourteen-year-old daughter also was arrested for swearing on the school grounds. Both mother and daughter were confined in the county jail. However, the teacher was not arrested for the beating she gave Grace, although relatives of the injured girl assert they may yet cause her arrest and trial

The matter began when Grace, an attractive child, lively and husky, mounted her pony to ride to her home one evening after school had been dismissed. The pony had been given her by a grandfather and she was proud of it. But this particular evening she could not get it started. Some other children began throwing cornc0bs at it. This was not effective. Then Grace, exasperated, so she admits, said "Dam it, Prince, go on." She insists that this is all she said.

But other reports state that she used language much more severe—so expressive that the teacher partly heard and came near to find out what was going on.

"What were those words you said?" Miss Collins demanded.

"I said, 'Dam it, Prince, go on,'" the girl replied.

"Get off that horse and come with me," the teacher ordered. She took Grace by the arm and led her into the school. She shut and locked the door, so that she was alone with the child

"Now, repeat what did you say?" Miss Collins asked.

"I told you once and won't tell you again," came the answer

Angered by this exhibition of sauciness, the teacher opened the door and told Orlin Cashman, a school boy standing outside, to get a strap from a harness and bring it to her. He returned and said he could not find a strap.

Then she told John Ringer, another youth, to go to the barn, where saddle horses were kept, and bring her a rein from a bridle. John came back and reported gallantly that he could not unfasten the rein.

The teacher left the girl in the school and went to the barn herself. She took off one of the heavy reins, consisting of two straps, riveted together, with the buckle at one end. She returned with this and struck the girl a number of times over the back and legs. It was an old-fashioned beating.

But Grace did not weep. She submitted without protest. Afterward she went to her home and reported the affair to her mother. After hearing the evidence of the whipping, Mrs. Thorson at once started out to hunt the teacher

Miss Collins had achieved wide notoriety only two months before, when a band of four desperadoes kidnaped her, with $1,000 in loot, kidnaped her escort and herself as they were driving at night from Atchison, and forced them, with pistols at their heads, to drive to desperate men to safety. The robbers had successfully committed their deed But officers were close behind. The men previously had stolen and changed cars four times

At the time they kidnaped Miss Collins and the young man with whom she was riding, the desperados were in a truck, which was not speedy enough for their get-away. They halted the couple, got in the rear seats, a gun was placed in the back of each, and they were ordered to drive where directed.

For six hours the bandits escaped capture by means of riding with them. At the end of that period, they arrived in Kansas City. They were made to drive around the outskirts of the town for an hour. Then they were compelled to drive four miles out in the country, where, at 3 o'clock in the morning, they were forced from the car, while the robbers turned around, and sped back into the city.

The next morning, the car was found deserted on a side street. The bandits never were caught.

Miss Collins scarcely had recovered from the nervousness incurred in this exciting situation, when she received the whipping at the hands of Mrs. Thorson. The school, which she taught, had a reputation for having unruly pupils. Last year the teacher then in charge could not hold the scholars, numbering about 40, in check. When Miss Collins accepted the job, she was notified of this fact, and was informed by the school board to do all in her power to maintain order.

She was successful. Under her firm hand, the school was quiet. The affair with Grace was the first difficulty she had had. In testifying about the matter, she said that Grace had been unruly, and also was in the habit of swearing before the other students.

The school board backed up the action of the teacher and helped put the screws on the prosecution of Mrs. Thorson. Her mother admitted that she had whipped the teacher, but claimed she was provoked in her act. However, upon the plea of guilty, the judge was forced to sentence her. He gave her, however, an option of payment of a fine, or a year in the State penitentiary. Mrs. Thorson was unable to pay the fine. So she was sentenced to jail, and the next day taken to her cell

Perhaps Mrs. Thorson might have obtained leniency, had she shown a repentant attitude at the trial. But she was defiant. She refused to apologize in any manner. She talked loudly and violently in the court room, and abused the teacher.

The daughter, Grace, was charged with delinquency, because of her habit of swearing. Arrangements were all made to send her to the State reformatory, and the announcement was made that she had been sentenced But 50 neighbors of the girl came to the judge, and protested the action. They said that Grace was a good girl, that she had never been in any trouble, that she worked hard at home, never went with the boys or gadded about.

Complaint then was made that her home conditions were bad. But this report was shown to be untrue. It was brought out that she had always had the best treatment, and although the family was poor, and the house poor, this did not affect her treatment at all. Upon this showing, the charge against Grace was temporarily dropped. She may yet go to the reformatory, however, the charge still hangs, and upon the recommendation of any further disorder, she will be taken to the [illegible]

Relatives of the [illegible] said they would prosecute Miss Collins for unlawfully beating the child. But thus far they have not acted. We are not through with her," [illegible] Thorson, father of Miss Thorson, who is employed from her home. "She yet will be punished for the awful whipping [illegible]

Miss Collins [illegible] the matter took up the matter at a special meeting. The board was satisfied that the new teacher was maintaining order and refused to interfere with her methods.

However, it was not considered prudent that Miss Collins should hereafter chastise unruly pupils with a heavy strap, studded with copper rivets, as serious injury might be caused. So a piece of rubber hose of sufficient length is obtained, and is kept at the school. People of the community have decided not to interest themselves in the matter of whether or not she should use this to punish the children. They say that they believe it is too severe a means of punishment. Others say that this is not necessary if the pupils are to be made to behave

The county superintendent of schools stepped into the matter. Miss Collins announced that she would not teach the school if Grace returned. The superintendent said that if she would not, then someone would be employed who would teach. Pending final determination of the delinquency charges against Grace, she was ordered to be in school every day.

Upon this ultimatum, the teacher gave in. She consented to allow the girl to return to school. But it is a state of armed neutrality, of watchful waiting, for parents on one side and on the part of the other.

At the broad marquee of the Metropole-Park a commissionaire in the uniform of a rear admiral swung wide the door and six [illegible] of magnificent Southern stock stepped royally out.

"Dear [illegible] I promised you ten dollars for your rapidity. I am giving you twenty."

From all directions as the words were spoken leaped the bellboys of the Metropole-Park. Forgotten were the Florida millionaires and the foreign diplomats, who haunted its premises—real, ready money cast to hand. But a certain rotund figure in uniform was ahead of all to them.

"Did I hear you say the apartment of Mr. Kenneth Thorne?" inquired Number 27. "I'll show you the way up."

The [illegible] under his arm [illegible] great gate was travelling over the distinguished person of [illegible] who was now surveying the lobby with visible approval. Its marble columns shone in mellow color and only a few yards away a fountain splashed soothingly in a court, where the elite crowded about a host of lacquered [illegible] tables for two.

Everywhere was the elegance [illegible] regality that had made the name of the Metropole-Park one to be mentioned with becoming reverence.

"A most passable cabin, boy. I had not imagined that the North could produce quite such sumptuous surroundings."

With a nod the Colonel moved off after Number 27. Then he stopped, for a peculiar and unforeseen obstacle had wound itself about his leg, and from the carpet came an assortment of snorts and yappings. The Pekingese which had tangled its leash about the Colonel's shoetop appeared to be in a fractious humor.

"Oh, do be careful," implored a voice. "He's worth five thousand dollars!"

Sapphire eyes were glorious with allure, and the long jade earrings tinkled like tiny temple bells. The vision, who had come down in the elevator with [illegible] Mr. Thorne only an hour or so ago, was even more lovely now than she had been and the eyes of Colonel Crocker Wetherbee gleamed with honest pleasure as he swept the broad-brimmed hat from his head and bowed from the waist down.

"Any animal with so lovely an owner is worth at least a million dollars," he declared with [illegible] conviction. "A most fortunate bloodhound, indeed."

Erect once more, he placed his hat above his heart, paying no attention whatever to the squirmings of the Pekingese. His attendant with [illegible] card, would [illegible] matter of [illegible] from the vicinity of his feet.

"Madam, it is an honor to be beneath the same roof as your charming self. Lead on, boy, and I shall follow in trace."

There came a second flourish and the Colonel strode vigorously off, a tiny buzz of conversation trailing his martial figure. Colonel Crocker Wetherbee had been [illegible] the Metropole-Park for [illegible] minutes and already [illegible] fover realized that something totally new had arrived in New York.

"Mr. Thorne's dressing, I guess," hazarded Number 27 helpfully as he set down the bags in an empty Suite 1414. From behind a door at one side came the murmur of voices. That was where Kenneth and Celia were planning the future, happily oblivious of the fact that seven million dollars and a [illegible] arrived.

"No matter, boy." The Colonel smiled benignantly and moved down upon the table where the pitcher of ice water and a pair of tall glasses rested. A tiny portion of water [illegible] into the glass which he raised, studying it with the care of a connoisseur.

"Gosh!" muttered Number 27, whose eyes threatened to leap from his head. For the Colonel had produced from his hip pocket the most gigantic flask ever seen in the Metropole-Park and was decanting it contents into the glass. It was a Gargantuan [illegible] of a [illegible] Reverently the glass was raised aloft in the [illegible] of an [illegible] request.

"To good whiskey, beautiful women and fast horses—in the order named."

The glass descended—empty. No explosion occurred, no volcanic blaze of fire. Colonel Crocker Wetherbee, of Texas, had merely consumed something approaching a quarter of a pint of alcoholic liquor as though it were so much cold tea.

"There," he announced, "I feel vastly refreshed. And now to do honor to my host and hostess. My nephew Kenneth would seem to be a young man of position and substance if [illegible] from his taste in the apartment."

"He handed out ten spots," corroborated Number 27. Then apparently emboldened in the face of the presence: "His wife is a good looker, too."

"We Wetherbees are noted for our selection among the ladies." The Colonel's eyes brightened and he swung across the room to the telephone. "Flowers, flowers in profusion—that is what is needed to brighten a home graced by a woman. I shall see if the proper sort of blooms may not be ordered in so large a city."

The connection caught. The Metropole-Park prides itself upon [illegible] with a smile.

"This is Colonel Crocker Wetherbee, of Texas, talking from the apartment of my nephew Mr. Kenneth Thorne. I want a gorgeous cluster of magnolias sent to the suite without delay. [illegible] Your pardon?" He waited for a moment. "Oh—ah—the florist shop? There are no magnolia [illegible] number of dozens of your best American Beauty roses then. For Suite 1414. Remember my please. I shall have further orders for you. [illegible] The [illegible] If the [illegible] gas [illegible] to [illegible] matter [illegible] the head waiter? I have shot my man for less. She shall have flowers with my card as soon as possible. We Southerners should band together in a large Northern city."

A pen flew over pasteboard while the Colonel's face was bright with anticipation. Number 27 mopped his forehead.

"You shall be my ambassador. Take this to the lady with twelve dozen American Beauty roses. Below the Mason-Dixie Line we of the old school bow to beauty. She is of the South."

With considerable alacrity Number 27 loosed the [illegible] and [illegible] toward the [illegible] the guest chamber. [illegible] moment, boy! [illegible] respect [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] Water. [illegible] No [illegible] cubes [illegible] and [illegible]

It was a lover on a moment. After a mammoth drink had gone the way of the first, slightly dazed [illegible] lagging at one ear Number 27 found the door and departed as one in a dream. A fifty-dollar bill was clasped in one hand.

"Number 27," he informed himself aweully, "you've died and gone to heaven."

He moved briskly over to a stand and chose himself a cigarette out of an expensive box of a hundred. Tripping joyously in silver slippers that looked as if [illegible] made for her slim feet, Celia had gone out into the big blue room and Kenneth had followed her. He felt completely satisfied with himself in the armor of a dinner coat that fitted just as and where it should. I first thought that I was facing an utterly unusual case of mind-reading. I was forced to discard this supposition when Therese Neumann spoke words partly unknown to me but later proved to be correct, and particularly when she quoted some words of Christ with an Aramaic suffix [illegible] syllables which I had already entirely forgotten.

If this phenomenon can be explained, I leave to my colleagues [illegible] mental faculty to decide. I can only testify that the words spoken by Therese Neumann during her Friday trances are Hebrew, Aramaic and partly Latin when it comes to quoting words of Pilate."

The results of the examination of the mystery girl by the learned commission of the University of Erlangen were awaited with intense interest by church people, sceptics and scientists. And when their failure to explain the phenomena was announced a second committee of investigation from another university was organized, and medical men, scientists and earnest laymen from all over Europe started for the little Bavarian village determined to get to the bottom of the matter. The further investigations and later developments of this remarkable case will be told in these pages next Sunday.

GENERAL ELECTRIC offers this remarkable value!

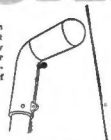
A QUALITY CLEANER

This rubber bumper on the end of the handle protects furniture or floors from any possible scratching.



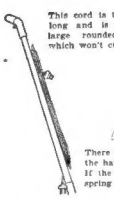
This trigger switch is placed so that the cleaner may be turned on or off without taking one's hand off the handle.

This snap-on brush provides the broom action which loosens dirt and litter so that the powerful suction can easily swallow them.

This dust proof bag is cleverly placed so that it is never in the way. It has a trap in its throat so that the dirt can never fall back into the air passage. It is perfectly sealed and easy to empty.

This nozzle is adjustable. Turning a screw raises or lowers it so that it can most efficiently clean bare floors or heavy rugs.

This nozzle is equipped with an unusually strong and efficient fan that creates the suction and is driven by a General Electric motor with precision type ball bearings.



This cord is twenty feet long and is wound on large rounded hooks which won't cut it.

These special castors, with a service bracket mounting back of the motor, make the cleaner particularly easy to move.

There is a special lock to hold the handle rigid at any angle. If the handle is not locked a spring keeps it upright.

The motor base, cleaner body and cap are all made of aluminum. This makes the G-E Cleaner as light as possible.

NEVER NEEDS OILING

One of the features which appeals most to busy housewives is the fact that the General Electric motor of this cleaner never needs oiling. Away with messy oil cans. Away with the trouble which arises from too much or too little oil. Here's a cleaner that needs no attention—always ready to do a thorough cleaning job.

HERE is a splendid cleaner—unusually powerful in suction—unusually easy to use. Lightly it cleans its way across your rugs—whisking away the dust and the dirt, leaving a bright, clean trail behind.

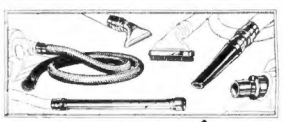
How can so fine a cleaner—plus six wonderful attachments—sell for as little as $49.00? General Electric's vast distribution facilities make it possible. Throughout the country wholesale warehouses serve thousands of dealers who handle products of General Electric. Marketing becomes comparatively economical—advantages of price result. And these advantages have been passed along to you.

If you have no cleaner — or if you ever expect to replace the one you have—take this opportunity to see the G-E Cleaner. Try it now and buy when you're ready.

GUARANTEE

This is a copy of the General Electric Cleaner Guarantee. It is backed by the largest electrical organization in the world — a company which employs seventy-five thousand people. With such backing, a guarantee is your unfailing assurance of satisfactory service.

Tested and Approved by Good Housekeeping Institute
Approved by Priscilla Proving Plant



Six specially designed attachments and a convenient cloth holder are included in the exceptionally low price.

Swiveling joints, which allow free use of the tools without twisting the hose, are an important feature of the General Electric Cleaner attachments. It's quite remarkable how this simplifies the use of the tools.

Without extra charge, you receive these six attachments:

1—Coupling. This is inserted by allowing the G-E monogram plate to swing to one side.

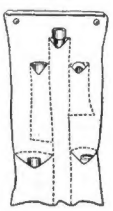
2—Hose. Eight feet of strong, covered rubber hose, exceptionally well made, attractive and flexible.

3—Extension tube. For use where rigidity is desirable or for cleaning high places.

4—Upholstery tool. This fits on the end of the hose for cleaning furniture, or under low-built pieces.

5—Upholstery brush. This fits on the end of the upholstery tool.

6—Soft nose tool. Made of soft rubber, so it will not scratch furniture. Particularly good for hard-to-clean corners.



FREE With the cleaner and its six attachments you receive, without charge, a serviceable cloth bag in which the attachments may be kept neatly, conveniently and always ready for use.

GENERAL ELECTRIC Vacuum Cleaner

In The Dark By Sydney Horler

time. She was no longer a hypocrite—that pretending to become a traitress had placed an intolerable burden of shame upon her shoulders. Now, whatever was in store, she felt she could breathe freely once again. Help must come sooner or later, and then the whole wretched business would be over.

For an hour this thought consoled her. It was after that first hour that the girl's spirits began to flag again. Not a sound came to her from outside that small, poorly-furnished room. The door had been locked on the outside, and there was no hope of escape through the barred window. It was as though she had been placed in a tomb.

It was this waiting which proved so unnerving. Margery Steers was an accomplished girl—had she not been, she could not have held her important post—and her vivid imagination now commenced to play tricks upon her. She remembered reading a recent newspaper article on the alarming number of girls who disappeared in London each year, and of whom nothing was ever heard of again. Now that she had openly defied the blackmailer, he might have no scruple about murdering her. It seemed very likely.

Time dragged wearily on. Really this suspense could be snapped! If only something would happen! But the intense silence continued. She commenced to abandon all hope.

Later—much later—when she was digging her nails into the palms of her hands to prevent herself screaming, she looked once again at the time. It was five minutes past one. She had been in that room for over four hours—a lifetime of dread it had seemed.

In order to try to soothe her overwrought nerves, she rose to her feet and walked once more upon the narrow bed. She really must get a hold of herself; otherwise she would be unable to put up any sort of a fight when a crisis came.

How she would have welcomed sleep! But even that most fitful dozing was impossible.

What happened to be another eternity of time passed.

Then—

What was that? She sat upright, every sense alert, her heart pounding, as that each beat was plainly audible.

It had been a faint clicking sound she had heard. She strained forward, her eyes fixed on the door.

The next moment she had put a hand to her mouth. She was living through again a scene that would always be imprinted upon her memory. The door was slowly opened, and shuffling towards her was the same dreadful looking dwarf who had come to that room on a previous night. He carried an electric torch, and the light of this fell full upon her, dazzling her eyes.

She tried to speak—to force herself out of that stupor of fear—but her brain refused to function, and no words came.

"Hush! I am your friend. . . You are in great danger—and I have come to take you away!"

She felt that she must be dreaming. This stunted man, whose very presence was so terrifying, her friend?

Yet the words caused hope to come back to her in such a tumultuous flood that she found her voice.

"Who are you?" she asked breathlessly.

The dwarf waved a hand, which she noticed was beautifully moulded.

"I am your friend. I swear that!" he added, earnestly. "You are in great danger in this house, that is why I have come to take you away. You must have confidence—for we cannot waste time in talking. Come quickly, and make no noise."

Margery stood up. After the terrific strain of the past few hours she felt so weak that she could scarcely remain erect. But her prayer had been answered, although employing an unattractive agent. Providence had helped her!

Ten minutes later she stood outside the house. The street was deserted. She did not recognize it, but guessed the thoroughfare, by the type of houses on either side, to be one of the main streets of Mayfair. She noticed the number of the house from which she had escaped to be 217.

"Quickly! I have a car waiting! We must get away!"

It was the dwarf speaking.

"You will take me to my home?" she asked.

"Come! Come!"

The man had brought her out of such trouble that her only feeling was one of tremendous relief. Now, however, some faint stirring made her look at her rescuer. The man was regarding her intently. His eyes seemed faithful. The inclination she had to turn and run away was repressed.

"You have been very kind to me," she said.

The dwarf made an indistinguishable sound, and caught hold of her hand.

"The car!" he said, pointing.

She went with him. Her brain was a riot of conflicting emotions. Her left hand was burning, set on fire it seemed by the touch of the dwarf's fingers.

The car was a powerful two-seater racing model.

"Get in!" exclaimed the dwarf, excitedly.

When she had complied, he took the seat at the wheel, looking like some hobgoblin of a nightmarish fancy.

He proved a capable driver, however, and Margery reflected gratefully that within a few minutes she would be safely at home.

Her first definite suspicion came when the dwarf quickened the pace of the car alarmingly. He—he was not going towards Westminster! They were speeding through some unknown suburb.

"Where——"

The rest of the question died on her lips. Slackening the pace of the car, the dwarf leaned towards her.

The next moment she experienced a sickening sensation of nausea. The dwarf had thrust something over her mouth, the fumes of which were rapidly robbing her of consciousness.

Her last impression was of being driven through the night at a terrific speed. Then blackness came . . . and oblivion.

Margery awoke with a surge in her ears. She was in a peculiar room. It was perfectly circular. For a window, there was a long, narrow aperture with deep embrasures. Looking at this, the still half-conscious girl noticed that the walls of this singular room must be at least two feet thick.

And that monotonous surge!

She rose unsteadily, and walked to the narrow slit. Between the beginning of the wide ledge and the glass frame was two feet of space. A foot away from the glass were two stout iron bars fixed horizontally in the masonry. These not only precluded any thought of escape, but interfered with her vision of what might be immediately below.

Looking beyond, she was able to see a wide expanse of grey—tossing sea; this new prison of hers must be perched on a cliff!

Stunned and bewildered by the fresh twist in her affairs, she did not hear the door opening until, turning suddenly, she saw the dwarf gesturing at her. Instantly she rose unsteadily.

"What is this place? Why have you brought me here?"

The dwarf looked at her with burning eyes. He made a curious deep obeisance.

"I have brought you here to be my bride," he said in a thick, guttural tone. "I love you—I loved you from the first moment that I saw you. I care nothing, despised, shunned, though I am now. For soon," his voice seemed to change to a scream, "I will be a king—the man who has the most power in the world! Riches will be mine in abundance—and I shall place them all at your little feet!"

He paused as though expecting some reply, but Margery was too paralyzed by astonishment to speak.

"You shrink from me? I am used to that." He paused again, while a sort of emotion shook his misshapen body. "But you—you," he went on, "why I was forced to drug you on the journey here, I know that you would not come of your own accord. You are the most beautiful living thing—beautiful enough to be queen of the world! And that is what I am going to make you, for soon, quite soon now, I shall be the emperor of the world! Yes, I, Guillaume Zoab! My dear, you must not look upon my face—you must look beyond this ugly body of mine, and see into my heart!" He thumped his left breast with a curiously beautiful hand, "that heart which, because of my love for you, is big and splendid!"

He looked at her as she still shrank away from him, huddled against the wall, and then made another deep obeisance.

"I will leave you now, sacred treasure of my heart."

Margery noticed as he turned away that his eyes, deep-set in that repulsive face, were like a wistful dog's, and that they brimmed with tears.

CHAPTER XVII.

Zoab Gives Audience.

STRAIGHT from leaving the girl, Zoab went to another room in that curious new residence of his. He was about to give audience to three very powerful men—all of whom were multi-millionaires.

It did not matter to the ex-professor of Toledo University that these men were utterly unscrupulous, and that they intended to use him as their tool for the most damnable plot yet conceived by man. These three, Schriner, Zundt and Wilowski, international financiers, represented money to the bacteriologist; and, because of the girl he had just left, Zoab wanted money badly. This unholy confederacy had promised him an initial payment of ten thousand pounds when his work was complete. This would not take him much longer. Another week, a fortnight at most . . .

Guillaume Zoab had become a changed man. Like Victor Hugo's immortal character, he had fallen in love with a beautiful human flower. Meeting Margery Steers had effected a complete transformation. For many months previous his consuming ambition had been to exact a terrible vengeance upon mankind for the indignities he had been made to suffer. Like another, but more terrible, Nero, he would have glutted himself upon the spectacle of a ravaged and panic-stricken world being decimated by a new disease so contagious and ruthless that thousands would die from it every day.

That he was penniless had not affected him then. All he lived for was bringing that loathsome germ to fruition. While he was doing so, he had food to eat and clothes of a sort to wear.

The first night that Margery Steers had been brought to the house of Juhl, Zoab, in looking at her, had had a new vision; he almost forgot his lust for vengeance in the suddenly born wish to take this girl away to a secret place and devote the rest of his life to adoring her.

Reflection had made him realize that this desire was impossible without one thing. He must have money—money to buy this girl dresses, jewels, everything which the heart of woman could desire. He must place her in a shrine that was fitting in every way, and this was only possible through the possession of wealth.

For some time he had nursed this passion in secret; and then, unable to keep it in control any longer, he had approached Juhl, making a bold demand for no less a sum than ten thousand pounds. His mind, used always to abject penury, could not conceive a greater amount than this; it represented climbable riches.

The Colossus had been staggered. For some moments he was literally struck dumb. The thought of this shambling wretch of a man desiring money—and such an amount of money—then turned him into a raving volcano.

"I will not give you a penny," he stormed; "you must be mad! Remember all that I have done for you already! Do you wish to be whipped again, Zoab?"

The dwarf drew away. Although Juhl did not realize it, that unthinking and callous remark had made Zoab swear to kill him. Already the bacteriologist did not like the idea of Juhl forcing him to work for an unknown man, a man whose face he had never seen, whose voice filled him with dread.

Affecting contrition, he had shuffled away. But that night, when the envoy of the Unholy Confederacy had approached him, he had been only too willing to listen. Who the masters of this man were, what they wished him to do—these were matters of indifference; the only thing that counted was that the man had promised him wealth, great wealth.

So, with the picture of the girl always filling his mind, he had conducted those secret negotiations which had brought him now to the meeting in that heavily-panelled room, perched high over the surging sea.

An ordinary man would have been repelled by looking into the faces of the three who awaited his coming. All had reptilian eyes; these were creatures who had sold their souls to the devil in return for financial power. Although each was already possessed of enormous wealth, they spent their lives plotting, sometimes against each other, to secure more millions. In the present case, it pleased them to unite their forces. Schriner was to operate in Europe, Zundt in America and Wilowski in the East. Once this powerful weapon was placed in their hands by the bacteriologist, they intended to bring the whole world to their feet, cornering markets through the sense of awful terror that was bound to ensue.

Schriner was the spokesman.

He stood up as the dwarf entered, holding out a package.

"Here is the money you were promised," he said; and while Zoab tore open the thick envelope excitedly and commenced counting the notes of heavy denominations, the speaker continued: "You will be quite safe here to continue your research work. We have bought this derelict Castle, constructed a laboratory and you stand no risk of interference. What we wish you now to tell us is how quickly you consider you can complete your investigations. We should also like to have from you a description of this particular poison germ, and its effect. . . ."

Zoab, his eyes shining fanatically, launched into details. . . . .

To Be Continued Next Sunday.

What People Usually Die Of

PEOPLE who dwell in rural districts live longer than inhabitants of towns and cities, and are less subject to most diseases.

In former times they lived much longer than city folks, but within recent years the latter have been catching up in this respect, so that the difference in longevity is by no means so great as it used to be.

City people lead less healthful lives. They have not an adequate allowance of fresh air and exercise. The value of open air exercise may be disputed. But the shortening of their average longevity has always been due largely to epidemic diseases, which are far more destructive when people are crowded together.

A century ago there was no sanitation worth mentioning in either city or country. Epidemics at frequent intervals slaughtered the urban populations wholesale, while the rural districts suffered comparatively little.

At a later period there was some sanitation in cities but none as yet in rural parts. That helped to lessen the longevity gap between city and country. Today sanitation in cities is highly developed, and to some extent, though much less so, in rural districts.

The highly developed sanitation of cities, particularly in relation to purity of water supplies, together with the discovery of means whereby epidemic diseases can be prevented or checked, is accountable for the lengthening of the average life in urban communities.

In the last fifty years the average length of life in rural districts has increased, but by no means with as great a gain as in the case of urban populations. Yet even now the farmer and the farmer's wife live, on average longer than the average city man and woman.

The women, in city or country, have always had the best of it in the matter of longevity. They live nearly four years longer than the men. It is suspected (though not positively known) that in rural parts their lives, formerly, were shorter than those of the men. But conditions for them have been markedly changed for the better by the lightening of farm work.

Within recent years heart disease, which has markedly increased its death rate in cities, has shown a lessened mortality in rural districts.

Deaths from pneumonia have decreased considerably, and in about equal measure, in city and country.

Tuberculosis of the lungs has diminished by one-third in cities, but only by one-tenth in rural regions.

Cerebral hemorrhage (apoplexy) has barely maintained its mortality record in rural districts, but has increased ten per cent in cities.

Bright's disease of the kidneys has dropped five per cent in the cities, and has increased five per cent in the rural regions.

Typhoid in the cities shows a mortality lessened by 75 per cent, and a drop in rural parts is 60 per cent.

Measles has dropped 25 per cent at its death rate in both city and country.

Diphtheria has dropped nearly one-third in the cities and one-fourth in rural districts.

Summing this up, it would seem that city people, as compared with country folks, are at an increasing disadvantage where diseases of the heart and circulatory system are concerned, but that this is balanced by a less favorable showing in rural regions as regards other maladies.

However, there is no getting away from the fact that city folks in the United States, notwithstanding their great gain in longevity in recent decades, are still in this respect far behind the rural people, who, on an average, live six years longer than they.

Smiles Worth Thousands

In Business, in Society, Come When Teeth are Film Free

Dentists urging NEW-FOUND WAY to tooth beauty and adequate protection against tooth and gum disorders

ORDINARY brushing does not successfully remove dull film from teeth, the film to which science attributes most "off color" teeth and many serious tooth and gum disorders.

Run your tongue across your teeth and you will feel that film—a slippery sort of coating. It absorbs discolorations. It clings to teeth and breeds germs. It is the basis of tartar. And germs with tartar are the cause of pyorrhea.

If your teeth are not film clear and sparkling, your present way of cleansing probably is failing you. Film must be removed.

Send for 10-day Free Tube

For that purpose, get the special film-removing dentifrice called Pepsodent that most dentists urge. It's different from all other tooth pastes. A recent scientific discovery.

It removes the film and hardens the gums to healthy coral tint. It gives teeth thorough cleanliness and high polish. It acts, too, to multiply the alkalinity of the saliva to combat the acids of decay. And thus meets modern dental requirements in all ways.

Use twice each day—at morning and at night. Learn what film-free teeth mean to your smile. Get Pepsodent at drug store. Or send coupon for 10-day trial tube.

SMILES ARE DAZZLING WHITE when film is gone. Teeth sparkle like polished jewels. Gums firm to healthy coral tint. Thus this new scientific way of dental care becomes one of the greatest beauty treatments of the day, and, with its unique therapeutic and prophylactic qualities, a great aid in oral hygiene.

How to Select Poultry

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,

The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

POULTRY of all kinds is particularly seasonable during the holiday period. A few tips on how to select tender, choice and really economical birds will ensure a successful and appetizing dinner. In buying poultry it pays to get the best, for in the end it is really the cheapest.

When selecting chicken, one should request a "fatted" chicken because a small fatted chicken contains more meat per weight than a heavier bird. All poultry should be plump in appearance; it should have smooth, soft legs and feet and a smooth moist skin; the end of the breast bone should be flexible and yielding when felt with the fingers; the skin should be easily broken and not leathery; the eyes should be bright, the comb red and there should be plenty of pin feathers.

Avoid all fowls having bruised or purplish skin as they are sure to be old. Another sign of age is a hard scaly leg and coarse pin feathers. Rough feet and spurs are sure indications of age. The most tender bird has white skin, rot yellow and not purplish.

It is a mistake to choose too large a bird for one's needs. A seven or eight pound turkey should be sufficient for a family which usually buys a five pound chicken. Or if the number to be served is large, it is a better plan to purchase two small or medium birds, young and tender, rather than a large 20 pounder. The big bird has very coarse legs and the proportion of bone and waste is greater than in a small bird.

The butcher should dress poultry carefully and send with the cleaned fowl the gizzard (empty), the liver, heart and the legs. Also he should be asked to draw the tendons of the drumsticks or lower leg joint. Otherwise, the tendons will make very tough eating since they become bony on cooking.

The pin feathers should also be removed, or, if not, they must be carefully singed before stuffing. A small toilet tweezer is excellent for pulling out the stiff pin feathers. Sometimes a strawberry huller does this work quickly.

Do not forget to have the small oil sack which lies just above the tail cut out. The bird should be wiped inside and out with a damp cloth before putting away in the refrigerator until it is time to further prepare it.

A goose should be young or "green." That is, not over six months old. Scrub the goose gently with water and white soap all over the outside skin. Then hold the bird under the faucet and let water run through. If the bird seems dry and wizened, let it stand in water for a half hour. This is a good treatment for cold-storage poultry.

Some persons advocate parboiling goose, but this should not be necessary if the bird is young as the parboiling removes too much flavor and fat. A better plan is to raise the bird on a rack in the roasting pan and give it a quick high temperature searing to remove excess oil. Basting with hot salt water improves all coarse poultry while it is roasting.

Domestic duck has been greatly improved in the breeding and feeding, making duck one of the most acceptable holiday meats when "you don't want turkey." The flesh is dry, and therefore the duck should always be a young bird. It will also require considerable basting, and really tastes best when cooked by the braised method which is a combination of moist cooking with high heat. Thin slices of bacon or salt pork may be skewered on the top of the breast to keep it tender.

While not the usual practice, it is better to arrange the turkey or other bird with breast down so that the breast does not become dry, but receives the juices and fats as they fall down in the pan. A covering of stiff brown paper over the breast, will prevent extra dryness, just the same as does one prevents a cake from becoming too brown.

Some housewives do not understand how to truss a bird and think it is a complicated process. The process is very simple. First cross the drumsticks, tie them securely with a string and fasten to the tail. The wings need not be touched, if the last joint is cut off, since it is very inedible in any case. However, for those who wish the more fancy trussing, take a long darning needle filled with cotton twine, pass it through the wing and directly through the bird and across through the other wing, tying the string on the back of the bird. After the bird is cooked, and before sending to table, the string should be removed.

The feet of all poultry is useful for soup or gravy. They contain considerable gelatin, and if well scrubbed should contribute their flavor to the stock pot. The giblets should be used for a rich gravy. Cut the heart crosswise in two, cut through the thick part of the gizzard, and break up the liver

The neck also is used to better advantage for gravy, than if left on the bird. In certain forms of preparation the coarse skin may be entirely removed from the bird, and this skin added to the giblets, neck and feet for making a rich gravy stock.

One plan of preliminary stuffing of a goose is to use one unpeeled orange and one unpeeled but cored apple. Keep this fruit in the goose for the first 30 minutes when it is being treated to high heat so to move the excess fat. Then remove the fruit and fill with prepared stuffing. Again, a favorite way with duck is to stuff the cavity entirely with coarse celery during the first half hour. Then remove the celery, and stuff as usual. These plans give special flavor to the meat and are worth the small extra pains.

The practice of dredging with ½ cup flour to which ¼ teaspoon salt has been added protects the bird from extra browning and makes a better colored gravy. All roasted poultry should be basted every 10 minutes with hot water. For those who have a temperature control on their ovens, the following time of roasting should result in moist, flavorful and perfectly prepared poultry:

Roast Turkey—Sear at 500 degrees for 30 minutes; reduce heat to 325 degrees and finish, allowing 25 minutes to each pound of turkey. Baste every 10 minutes.

Roast Duck—Sear at 475 degrees for 30 minutes; reduce to 325 degrees and finish, allowing 20 minutes to each pound. Baste every 10 minutes.

Roast Goose—Sear at 500 degrees for 30 minutes. Remove excess fat. Hold at 450 degrees for 30 minutes. Finish at slow oven 300 degrees, allowing 25 minutes to each pound. Baste every 10 minutes.

Roast Chicken—Sear at 475 degrees for 30 minutes; reduce to 325 degrees and finish, allowing 20 minutes for each pound. Baste every 10 minutes.

Sleep

This new Swiss food-drink usually brings sound sleep instantly . . . in a natural way . . . more than 20,000 doctors recommend . . . Make This 3-Day Test and See Tonight—you can get 8 hours of solid sleep. Tomorrow—you should awaken abounding with new-found vigor. No matter how sleepless your nights have been in the past.

For modern medical science has found a natural way (a way without drugs) that usually brings instant, restful sleep that quickly restores your tired mind and body.

Morning finds you a new woman. You are fresh, clear-eyed, buoyant. Youthful in looks and spirit. You have energy to carry you through the day and the evening's social activities.

That is the experience of most Ovaltine users.

The 3-day test we offer here will show you. We urge you to make this test. It is worth while.

Why Ovaltine brings restoring sleep

FIRST—It digests very quickly. Even in cases of impaired digestion.

SECOND—It supplies your system, with certain health-building essentials which are often missing from your daily fare. One cup of Ovaltine has actually more food value than 12 cups of beef extract.

THIRD—Ovaltine has the unusual power of digesting 4 to 5 times its own weight of other foods you eat. Hence digestion goes on speedily and efficiently. As a result frayed nerves are soothed because digestive unrest, the main cause of sleeplessness, is overcome.

This is why, when taken at night, a cup of hot Ovaltine brings quiet, restoring sleep in a natural way. And as you sleep the quick assimilation of nourishment it also restores to the entire body "Thus you gather new strength and energy for the next day.

Hospitals and doctors recommend it

Ovaltine is a delightful, pure food-drink. It contains no drugs. It is the special food properties of Ovaltine—and absolutely nothing else—that bring it wonderful results and popularity. It has been used in Switzerland for 30 years and is now in universal use in England and her colonies. During the great war Ovaltine was served as a standard ration to invalid soldiers.

A few years ago Ovaltine was introduced into this country. Today it is used in hundreds of hospitals. More than 20,000 doctors recommend it. Not only for sleeplessness, but because of its special dietetic properties, they also recommend it for nervestrain, malnutrition, backward children and the aged. Many take a cup of Ovaltine two or three times a day for its natural stimulation. It's truly a "pick-up" drink.

A 3-day test

All druggists sell Ovaltine in four sizes for home use. Or they can mix it for you at the soda fountain. But to let you try it we will send a 3-day introductory package for 10c to cover cost of packing and mailing. Just send the coupon with 10c.
